—We have examined a specimen of gingerbread made by Messrs. Newberry—each cake containing a teaspoonful of Cod Liver Oil. The gingerbread is extremely light and pleasant, the flavour of the oil being completely covered. This seems likely to prove a very useful mode of administering Cod Liver Oil to children, and to others who are nauseated by the offensive odour and flavour of the Oil as generally taken. —Medical Times, 12th Feb., 1859. ## SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE chief item of intelligence brought by the Calcutta Mail of the 23rd September, relates to two monster meetings held at Calcutta and Madras, to protest against the Income-tax Bill. At the former nearly 2,000 persons were present, both natives and Europeans, who unanimously resolved to petition both Houses of Parliament, as well as the Legislative Council, against a measure fraught, in their opinion, with great inconvenience and injustice, and likely to lead to disastrous consequences. The petition to "The Lords Temporal and Spiritual in Parliament assembled" concludes in the following words:—

"In conclusion, your petitioners humbly pray your lordships to take the matters of this petition into your favourable consideration, and to take such measures as may appear expedient to your lordships to have the general taxation of India placed on broad and sound principles, and particularly to prevent the establishment of a system of exceptional taxation on the industrial classes and on trades and professions, and of any general system for putting commerce and trades and professions under fiscal licence. And for the establishment of an equitable income and property tax in conjunction with such other taxes as may from time to time be expedient, and to take such measures as to your lordships may appear expedient to obtain from the executive governments an annual statement of income and expenditure, and of the financial state of the Government, and for the early publication of the same for the information of the public of India; and to take such means as to your lordships may appear expedient for having an authoritative inquiry made into the general administration of the Government, and the cause of the prevailing discontent and financial embarrassment; and for the opening of the Legislative Council to the non-official classes and the admission therein of a sufficient number of non-official and independent members to ensure the representation of public opinion in the said Council, and consequent thereupon for abolishing the Executive Councils, and placing the office of Governor-general and Governors in a proper state at once of freedom and responsibility in the exercise of their executive functions, and for such other remedies and relief as to your lordships may appear expedient."

The resolutions of the Madras meeting were to the same effect, as will be seen by the analysis that appears elsewhere.

The Governor-general had postponed his departure from Calcutta to the 10th or 11th of October, and contemplates a viceregal progress in right Royal state. His lordship, it is said, will be escorted by two infantry regiments, the one European, the other native, in addition to his body-guard. This force of 2,600 men will further be accompanied by some 20,000 camp followers. An embarrassed Government, like an embarrassed individual, has always money enough for ostentatious display and reckless extravagance.

The Lieutenant governor of Bengal returned to Calcutta on the 16th September, and on the 20th of that month the Lord Bishop set out on a visitation tour to the Northern Provinces, intending to spend the next hot season at Simla.

The discharged European soldiers continue to be embarked for this country at the rate of one thousand per week. Serious complaints are made on all hands of their violent and unmanly conduct, but this applies almost exclusively to the newly-raised regiments.

H.M.'s 99th regiment, which was under orders to proceed to China, is now to be retained in India, to the infinite disgust of those officers who had already disposed of their furniture and horses. The 67th and the Buffs, it is said, will shortly embark for Shanghai, whither they will be accompanied or followed by several Sikh corps.

The news from China refers entirely to the reception of Mr. Ward, the American Plenipotentiary. His Excellency consented to exchange the ratifications of the treaty at Peking, a village on the Gulf of Pecheli, rather than accede to the alternative offered by the Chinese of performing "kotow." The Russian Embassy appears to be established at Peking, but it is not stated on what terms.

The new Governor of Hong Kong, Sir Hercules Robinson, and the Attorney general, Mr. Adams, reached their destination on the 7th September, and immediately entered on their respective duties.

BENGAL.

TONY WELLER IN HOOGHLY.

The public are indebted to the Englishman for a legal report which affords us a glimpse of Hindoo village life under novel circumstances. Komurgunj, a village in Hooghly, is, it appears, the property of Seebnarayun Roy, an old Bramhun, of considerable character. Up to the present year it was, we may presume, like all villages under Bramhuns, very dirty, very comfortable, and intensely Hindoo. Recently, however, a firebrand, named Pundit Ishurchunder Bidyasangor, has taken up his residence there, and preached doctrines which involve not only treason but sacrilege. As a Pundit and a Bramhun, the sacerdotal thread of the landlord is nothing to him. He is of the "College," and knows how omens are produced. As a man of the world, and a favourite of great officials, he is not in much danger of being carried off, or confined in a dungeon, or arrested on a false charge, or disposed of in any becoming and accustomed zemindaree way. He has in fact very nearly as much right of free speech as a Bengalee, out of Calcutta, and not in office, can be expected to possess. He used this right. He taught the villagers that the custom of compelling widows to celibacy was a degrading superstition, that it was offensive to true Hindooism, and that the law of the land permitted remarriage. The Hindoos heard, and some of them believed. A faction sprung up who believed chastity preferable to celibacy, and who were strong enough to maintain their own ideas with the club. They numbered some respectable adherents, among whom were Gopal and Pertab Dass, and their opinions began rapidly to extend.

The zemindar did not approve it at all. He was a Hindoo, and held that tradition was a great deal more important than the Shasters. He was a Bramhun, and he knew that his order had set his face against all the mischievous marriages. Above all, he was an abhorrer of widows, held with his inimitable prototype that they were more dangerous to mankind than spinsters, that if the bond were once relaxed "more widders would be married than single women." The heresy must be suppressed.

Heretics are always suppressed in one way, whether the attack be made in Austria or Belfast, Goa or Komurgunj. The prominent heretics were seized by armed men, pounded into a jelly, and then ordered to sign a document purporting to bind them to discredit all widow marriages. They signed, but heresy in religion always leads to disloyalty to the established civil power. The proper course for a Bengalee beaten into a jelly by the landholder's Gomashas is to confess his fault, and bribe his tormentors not to beat him again. Gopal and his brother, however, were heretics, and they appealed to the magistrate for protection. Fortunately for them Mr. Cockerell is not thoroughly familiar with the doctrine of religious neutrality. To punish recusants from Hindooism is for Hindoos a religious act, but it was still in this instance prevented. The bravoes were fined, the zemindar, though acquitted of complicity, was bound over to keep the peace, and the victims were informed that they might marry all the widows they could induce to take them.

The incident is on one side a curious one. The zemindar, a sort of Hindoo Sir H. Inglis, a decent, quiet man, but determined to maintain the interests of religion and his own prerogatives, if necessary by the bamboo, one might have expected to find. But we did not expect to hear of Hindoo ryots taking up a liberal reform in the spirit of Englishmen, sticking to their convictions under their landlord's frown, carrying them out under his menaces, and justifying them under his bamboo. Such an occurrence suggests a doubt whether we quite understand this race, whether we are not a little too despondent as to the effect of reforms. It suggests, too, more strongly than ever, the enormous importance of native aid in the work of civilisation. A European might have taught these villagers the propriety of widow marriages for a century. He would be lucky if he escaped suspicion of wanting some widow for himself, and if he did, his words would have been none the less futile. "The custom is good for Feringhees, bad for us" would be the farthest limit of concession. A native, known, popular, and trusted, preaches the same dogma, and in a few months there is a sect at his back ready, if need be, to suffer the bamboo.—Friend of India.

THE DEFECTS OF INDIAN POLITICIANS.

It is becoming a misfortune for India that Anglo-Indians have no political training. They have wide opportunities of exhibiting administrative power. Most of them take a keen interest in all the "practical" reforms of the day. They are often men of thought, and their incessant contact with social questions give their views on those points unusual clearness. They are independent in opinion to a degree which is almost injurious, for it impedes coherent action. But of political training they have not a trace, and the deficiency begins to be seriously in their way. No Anglo-Indian, for example, ever concedes anything in discussion, ever believes the opposite side can have any show of argument. The plan which Brown praises is pronounced by Jones folly, while Jones is just as bigoted to his own pet view. It is this anarchy of opinion which renders English politicians so distrustful of us all. What result, for example, can a committee of inquiry draw from opinions like those of Captain Ochterlony and Mr. Mangles? They had equal opportunities of information; their class interest was the same; their capacity, tested by the evidence, was about equal in degree. Yet they reasoned from the same data to diametrically opposed results, and each most probably thought his opponent dishonest. The evil arises from the want of any collision of ideas, of any means for a general comparison of facts and theories.

A similar deficiency impairs all Anglo-Indian theories about the empire. There is no France in Asia to be conciliated, no Turkey to be protected, no Austria to be advised, no fleet and no army to be put in competition with our own. India is isolated, and Anglo-Indians therefore acquire the most rooted ideas of the value of India to Great Britain. The fact that the Canadas are as valuable, that Australia is more important, that the Sugar islands have ten times our political influence, that the whole tribute of India is barely a ninth of the pecuniary value of the difference between a bad English harvest and a good one, never enters their heads. India is all in all, and English politicians are sickened with toujours succès. This is the real reason of the extreme dislike felt for Indians in English society, the extreme distrust with which old Indian statements are received. The class think, and talk, and write as if the interests of India were superior to the interests of the British empire. The interference of the Horse Guards with the army question, for example, strikes the Indians almost as impertinent. They forget that if the Commander-in-Chief thinks the British empire will be benefited by a new training-ground for her troops his duty is to press the general and not the sectional view. So with finance. The concession of a guarantee on our debt is an imperial, not an Indian question. Yet to hear Indians talk you would fancy the refusal an act—not of impolicy, which it may be—but of injustice. In one and the same breath Canada is told to keep up her own army, and England is scolded because the home depots of Indian regiments are paid for out of Indian revenue. There is a narrowness of view in some of us, produced by over-concentration of thought, which needs to be corrected if we, and not English tenpounders, are to decide on the future of the country.

Precisely the same defect is injuring our legislation. Read the scene at the second reading of the Licensing Bill. The Chief Justice, a man conservative by habit and training, and for eight years member of the Executive Cabinet, asks for more information. He is bluntly told by Mr. Harington that he is a popularity hunter, who wants to assume the functions of the House of Commons. Imagine Lord Lyndhurst asking for a Blue-book, and told by Lord Granville that he wants to create a bread riot, and you have a scene very nearly analogous. Yet Mr. Harington does not deserve all the abuse heaped upon his head. He is this week what he was last, a very upright man, of more than average ability in his special department, and very much in his place in an Indian Legislature. He is simply ignorant of politics, untrained to political discussion. We dare say he honestly regarded the Vice-President as a mutineer deserving immediate dismissal. How should it be otherwise? He had never met with opposition in his life, except in the form either of a minute or an insurrection. He had been accustomed to look to "Government" as the final referee, as the one authority with which there was to be no argument. A real collision among governing men, standing face to face, each speaking out his real sentiments without apologies or smoothness, was out of the pale of his experience. He met it, of course, not as a cabinet minister would have met it, by an argument showing that the information could not be safely given, or by a string of most frank and most unintelligible statements, but as he would have met a mutiny, by a direct menace. The discussion on Saturday was nearly as bad. Everybody seems to have lost his temper, and have been ready, like an Irish member, to reply to an argument by an invitation to pistol-shooting. That the lie was not given on two occasions seems to have been more of accident than of courtesy. Such a debate is in the highest degree injurious where there is no cultivated mob behind the leaders to keep temper from hurrying them into injudicious action. It is discussion, and not representation, which we expect from our Legislature; and Indian politicians have not yet learned even to discuss.—Friend of India.

TEA IN THE KOHISTAN.

The success which has attended the experiments in tea growing in Kumaon, Gurhwal, and the Deyrah Doon, has for some time past attracted public attention. It may not be so generally known that the Kohistan of the Punjab gives equal, or even superior, promise as a field for the cultivation of the plant. The district of Kangra has been the chief scene of trial; but within certain degrees of elevation there is reason to believe that tea would thrive throughout the range of the Himalayas in North-Western India. In the Punjab the first plantations were at Nagrota and Bhawarna, some miles from Kangra, and it was the sight of the luxuriant shrubs, reared in these little nurseries, that induced Lord Dalhousie to sanction operations on a larger scale. Although there is a vast extent of forest and of uncultivated land in that mountainous region, at the time of the settlement of the land revenue the exclusive right of Government to dispose of it was unfortunately not explicitly asserted, and hence to this day the shadowy title of the native cottier claims a certain recognition, and in the event of the occurrence of a demand for land, which in his hands might lie barren for ever, would bear a certain value. But there was one exception to this state of things. One piece of land there was to which the most greedy would advance no claim, which the greatest stickler for Rajpoot birthright disowned as a heritage. A curse was supposed to cleave to it, and superstition gave it to the Government in spite of themselves. This was Holta; and here Dr. Jameson formed the new plantation.

In the hills they call it a plain, but in reality it is made up of little hills and dips and spurs, winding down from the Chumba range. It is about 5,000 acres in extent, and some 4,000 feet above the level of the sea, situated in North latitude 32 degrees and longitude 76 degrees. The soil, varying in depth from two feet to six inches, and resting upon a stiff red clay, is a fine black vegetable mould, to which the disintegration of granite boulders, scattered about by the glaciers of a remote geological period, is held to impart a peculiar fertility, and a special resemblance to the best tea soils in China. The undulations of the tract render drainage easy; whilst the waters of the two streams, called the Awa and the Nigal, may, in case of drought, be used for irrigation. Not that such watering is often necessary; for not only are the rains and snow of the locality far more copious than is usual in the hills, but at night a cold moist wind rushes down from the cloud-clapped barrier of the Chumba range and keeps the temperature damp. This condition of climate gives to Holta peculiar advantages as a tea-field. Another superiority it enjoys over Kumaon consists in the good roads, which render the markets of the plains available for its produce; and, as if nature had left nothing undone to facilitate the cultivation of the exotic, highborn Rajpoots, gentlemen whose prejudices forbid them to handle the plough, are ready in large numbers to compound with their consciences, and relieve their necessities, by using the spade in the preparation of the land for tea.

The planting commenced in 1853; but without injury to the shrubs the leaves cannot be gathered before three years have expired. The produce of 1856 was sold at Jullunder at the rate of Rs. 2.7.8 a pound. The highest price realized was Rs. 3.9.0 per pound. Since then the cultivation has been extended, and now covers 800 acres, bearing some five millions of plants. It is calculated that the produce of the present year will amount to 26,000 lbs., valued at Rs. 52,000; whilst the expenses of management are Rs. 16,000. The natives of the hills have, under the instruction of Chinese manipulators, made considerable progress in the art of manufacturing tea, but some of the finer processes are still beyond them, and to maintain the present quality of the tea it is necessary to keep the Chinese superintendents. Within certain limits, the higher the elevation the finer is the flavour of the tea. Some grown at Dhurmsala, at the height of six thousand feet above the level of the sea, has turned out excellent.

In China tea-nurseries are seldom extensive, but every village has its one or two acres devoted to the national product. We may yet see the same thing come to pass in the beautiful Kangru valley; and instead of rice and sugar, the zemindars will send to the markets of the plains the less bulky and more profitable article of tea. Natives will soon take to anything that decidedly pays. Potatoes, which formerly came from the North-West Provinces to Lahore, are now sent thither by camel-loads. Already the infection is spreading. A Rajpoot, by name Tek Sing, has a plantation of 100 acres, yielding some twenty maunds of leaves. Seedlings and seeds distributed gratis in large quantities by Government have been willingly accepted. The raw leaves are brought for manufacture to the Government factories, and a price of Rs. 8 a maund paid for them. One grant of 1,000 acres has been made to a European gentleman, but has not yet been brought under tea cultivation. The success of the Holta plantation has excited the attention of English capitalists, and overtures, which have been favourably received by the local Government, have been made for its transfer to a company. Much, however, must depend on the character and conduct of the agents deputed to the hills, and on their treatment of the natives, for none are more proud and sensitive, though they are simple and ignorant.

Whatever doubts may exist regarding the colonization of India by Europeans, the great advantages of European capital are sufficiently evident, and the difficulty has been to attract it. In the Himalayan tea-fields, however, there would appear to be the promise of certain profit. To small capitalists, especially such as are habituated to India, is presented the coveted allurements of high interest for money, conjoined with a delightful climate. Nor can we permit ourselves to doubt that, if a colony of discharged soldiers with their families were established on this favourable ground, their industry would be otherwise than remunerative, or their settlement a political advantage to British rule.—Friend of India.

COAL IN THE MURREE HILLS.

Some time in July last the attention of the Hon. the Lieut.-governor was drawn to the existence of coal in the Murree hills, when a reward of Rs. 500 was offered to any person who would discover the mineral. Several specimens of a substance resembling coal having been brought to Murree, a committee was appointed to inspect and report on the localities whence the specimens had been taken. The members were to determine whether coal actually exists, and if so whether apparently in any quantity. The committee was composed of Maj. A. Robertson, officiating superintendent Lahore and Peshawur Road, Capt. H. C. Johnstone, surveyor Derajat, Capt. H. Babbage, assistant commissioner, and Mr. F. A. Wilson, assistant engineer, Goojerat division, Lahore and Peshawur Road. These gentlemen assembled at the village of Bugla, twelve miles from Murree, on the 20th July last, and proceeded to carry out the instructions they had received. The deposits under the village (two in number), and two others in the same ravine, some miles further, and all within a short distance of the bottom of the ravine, were found to be small isolated irregular masses of a substance which the committee considered to be lignite. In some ravines under the villages of Balamrina and Bhun, two other specimens were extracted, which also, on examination, proved to be lignite.

A very thin vein, not exceeding an inch in thickness, and about forty or fifty feet long, was examined about a mile to the north-east of the village of Kattbie, but as it was so insignificant the committee did not deem it necessary to incur expense in blasting it out. The examination of certain specimens obtained from the south-east side of Mount Nir, led the committee to look with confidence in that direction. This Mount seems to have been the centre of considerable disturbance. The main portion of the mountain is formed of alternate layers of sandstone and clay in nearly horizontal strata, having only a slight dip to the west-south-west. A lower range, close to it on the south-east has the strata dipping to the north almost at an angle of forty-five degrees. The ranges to the north parallel to Mount Nir, as far as including the Murree range, dip also to the North at from 30 to 35 degrees, while the mountains to the East across the Jhelum river have the strata dipping only slightly to the East. On the East face of Mount Nir (about twenty miles South-east of Murree) about 800 or 1,000 feet above the level of the river, is situated the deposit above referred to; it is in an irregular vein at the foot of a sandstone cliff, having blue clay both above and below it. The main portion of the vein is about seven feet long, of an irregular form, sixteen inches wide at the centre and eight inches at the extremities. It shows again irregularly to the right and left, but much thinner, and altogether extends, as far as can be seen, about thirty feet in length. The deposit is mixed with slate, and appeared to be coal of a fair quality. Unfortunately, no member of the committee possessed a sufficient knowledge of geology to pronounce an opinion upon what may be expected from following up the vein, or whether it was most advisable to push the investigation by further search on the line of the vein above it, or below it. In addition to this, there was the absence of means, or manipulatory skill to pronounce on the real nature of the deposit. The test the committee applied, and upon which an opinion as to its being coal of a fair quality was based, was distillation, under which it yielded gas which burned with a clear white flame and coal tar, without, as far as they could discover, any trace of acetic acid.

The Committee therefore recommended that the specimens of the deposits collected from Mount Nir should be sent to Professor Oldham at Calcutta, and his opinion of the specimens, and his advice as to the best means of conducting the search be solicited. In the meantime it was recommended that a boring be made from above, and about sixty feet back from the face of the cliff, at the foot of which the vein exists, to ascertain whether the vein extends back, and if so, if it increases in thickness. It was further suggested that the search should be followed up by sinking shafts, as it is likely that thicker veins would be found below.

The Committee concluded by remarking that wherever deposits were found in rock, the rock beneath was stained with red by the wash from the run, leading to the supposition that some of the salts of iron, usually found in these deposits, probably the sulphurate, were present.

Major Robertson and his party have proceeded to visit other spots where deposits have been found.—Lahore Chronicle.

BURMESE CUSTOMS.

Among the Burmese fortune-telling is practised as a regular art by numbers of both men and women. You may often notice them sitting by the road-side, or under any open shed or house, where they attract the credulous by their papers covered with hieroglyphics, and a slate and pencil before them, with which to unravel any proposed question. The most common occurrences of daily life are frequently referred to their opinion. The beginning of a journey, the success of any enterprise, the return of absent relatives, the prospect for marrying, the results of sickness, the hazards of various acts of thieving or dacoity, the probable termination of law cases, questions relative to the duration of life and the manner of one's death, are all, more or less, the subject of a reference to the astrologers of the country.

The Burmese fortune tellers believe in the theory of individual destiny. That the time of birth, the particular position of the planetary bodies indicates a specific influence for weal or for woe concerning each person. It is the doctrine of fatalists, who believe that they are unable morally and physically to deviate one particle from their allotted destiny. That they are mere involuntary actors in the great drama of life, over which they have not the slightest control. They reduce themselves to the position of simple passive entities, and not the voluntary and free agents which we all are. The natural laws of attraction and repulsion which govern the properties of matter are thus applied to men as thinking and intelligent beings. Like a planet revolving in its own defined orbit, and controlled by certain centripetal and centrifugal forces, man moves in his own sphere, and is a mere skiff of matter, having neither reason, judgment, nor intelligence to direct him. Getting some clue to the topic which may happen to be under consideration, the oily-tongued fortune teller endeavours to put his inquirer on the best possible terms with his condition and future prospects. If an adverse opinion is delivered, remedies are proposed, as offering to some power, which is considered superior to the ill-boding influence.

Jugglery and slight of hand, arts which flourish in Southern India, are wholly unknown to the inhabitants of this country. So is the mimic art of ventriloquism. But they have, apparently, a strong conviction of the existence of witchcraft

Every form, therefore, of mental disorder, is ascribed to some mischievous supernatural agency. Such persons are generally left to their fate, but are never treated with any unkindness. Unlike the feeling which once reigned throughout Europe concerning this unfortunate class, the people properly consider it more in the light of individual misfortune than as a personal sin, requiring the punishment of the pillory, ducking and other refined barbarities, formerly practised in more enlightened countries.

The days of the week are likewise regarded as having a peculiar moulding power over individual character and temperament. Hence their belief in the following personal characteristics:—

Persons born on Sundays are said to be crooked and perverse in their dispositions. They are fickle, unstable, and readily affected by circumstances and things. They yield to circumstances, instead of making circumstances bend to them.

Those born on Mondays are said to be truthful and honest in their natural temperaments. Hence are generally prosperous on that account.

Tuesday persons are said to be patient, kind and good-tempered, and are usually very liberal in their dispositions.

All born on Wednesdays are said to be impulsive and impatient in their desires. They are for dashing off with precipitancy in the performance of anything they wish to accomplish.

Thursday folks are said to be covetous and given much to exaggeration, both in their language, and in everything with which they have to deal.

Friday people are said to be great talkers, and, as a consequence, their language is not the most reliable. They are prone (unintentionally, of course,) to make statements which are not true.

Saturday births are easily made angry. They are commonly quarrelsome, inclined to be obstinate, and are disposed to that which is evil instead of good.

With this curious astrological table before the indulgent reader, he will be able, by a little attentive study of his own personal traits and peculiarities, to see whether there is or not the slightest shadow of a probability that it can be verified by individual experience.—Rangoon Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

COURTS-MARTIAL.—We see in general orders several cases of courts-martial held on men of the local European corps for insubordination. At Dug-shai a private of the 1st Europeans was sentenced to fourteen years' transportation for attempting to shoot his sergeant. Lord Clyde could not confirm the sentence on account of some formal illegality. At Cawnpore a gunner of the artillery was sentenced to imprisonment for six months for having absented himself from carbine drill, contrary to orders, and having made use of the following language to his commanding officer: "I purposely absented myself from carbine drill yesterday evening, as I do not intend to serve as a soldier any longer," or words to that effect. At Berhampore a private of the 5th Europeans was sentenced to imprisonment for twelve months, and then dismissal from the army, for saying to the adjutant, who reproved him for his rifle being dirty:—"I am a civilian, and ought not to carry a rifle at all," or words to that effect; and in saying, when he was then and there ordered into confinement by that officer, "Blast your eyes to —, do you call this dirty, you sepoy officers, that has spoilt this regiment?" or words to that effect, and then having thrown down his rifle and belts. At Moaar a private of the 3rd Europeans was sentenced to penal servitude for seven years for having refused to take a comrade as prisoner to the guard, for having attempted to rescue him, for having used violence against his lance sergeant, and for having escaped from confinement. Other two privates of the same regiment were sentenced to six and seven months' imprisonment respectively for a modified form of the same offence. The Commander-in-Chief, finding that no less than seven per cent. of the trials by district courts-martial, and ten per cent. of those by regimental or detachment courts, have been set aside for illegality, has urged the commanding officers and members to give more care to the performance of the duties assigned to them. "Such a state of things is not creditable to the officers of the army."

FRENCH ENTERPRISE.—The Rangoon Times says the small colony of Frenchmen from Bordeaux, who recently settled at Ava, under the superintendence of the adventurer D'Orgoni, to start a silk factory, have come out in a more ambitious character. They are said to have made a proposition to the king for a monopoly of the produce of his country for twenty-five years. This is too monstrous a statement to be believed. Gallie audacity is great, but the selfish intelligence and strong monopolising habits of the king are too well known. So long as the French remain in favour, and prove subservient to the semi-barbarian's wishes, they may trade on a large scale. At present the Ava trade is engrossed by six Armenian houses.

REMOUNT AGENCY.—The purchase of horses at Kurrachee for the Bengal army is henceforth to be discontinued. The Remount Agency there will accordingly be abolished.

PROFITABLE INVESTMENTS.—The report of the Inland General Steam Navigation Company for the first half of this year shows a profit of Rs. 4,38,479 which will pay the shareholders at the rate of 50 per cent. per annum. For the same period the Calcutta Auction Company have declared a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. The share list shows 250 proprietors, holding 5,089 shares on which the sum of Rs. 2,58,580 has been paid up. The outstandings amount to a large sum.

WASTE LANDS, DARJEELING.—The Lieut. governor of Bengal has sanctioned, with modifications, the rules of the Superintendent of Darjeeling for the grant of waste lands there. Such grants shall be sold by auction at an upset price of Rs. 10 an acre, in plots of not less than fifty acres. On purchase, a deposit of 10 per cent. must be made, and the balance paid in annual instalments of 10 per cent. Government reserves the right to re-purchase land for roads and bridges for public purposes, and to indigenous timber, stone, and minerals. "Existing grants may be commuted under these rules at the option of the grantees. Grantees of land let out on building leases may commute at the rate of twenty years' purchase of their annual rent." For any but building land Rs. 10 an acre is much too high.

OUDE POLICE FORCE.—Reductions are about to be carried out in the new Oude Police, which will effect a saving to Oude of eleven lakhs of rupees a year, though the saving to the empire will be merely in the pay of the men. The force is henceforth to consist of twenty-one English officers, 1,470 Cavalry and 7,800 Infantry, exclusive of those on the frontier, which is now held by 600 Cavalry and 1,600 Infantry. Thus there will be for local purposes, protective, preventive and detective, less than 10,000 men instead of 20,000, the number before the mutiny. Orders have been issued to hand over to Jung Bahadur a slip of good forest and useless jungle land averaging four or five miles in breadth, and running at the base of the hill right along from the Goruckpore to the Rohileund boundary. We trust the Commissions which have been appointed to make out the boundaries will not make over the territory to Jung Bahadur until the nature of his connection with the rebels within his jurisdiction is clearly understood.

PUBLIC WORKS.—The Harkaru says the Supreme Government has fixed the sum of sixty eight lakhs of rupees as the maximum expenditure on public works in the North West Provinces for the current year. Several works already begun have accordingly been suspended. In the Punjab, so great is the want of money, all public works have been stopped.

THE NEW TARIFF.—An officer writes to the Delhi Gazette illustrating the heavy burden of the new tariff. He recently received a complete uniform which cost in England Rs. 1,500. His Calcutta agent's bill for landing and forwarding the case amounted to Rs. 319-12, of which Rs. 300 was duty at 20 per cent. The grievance of the high duty was not so great as the necessity of providing himself at such an expense with a uniform which would be worn once or twice a year only.

FALL OF RAIN.—In an article by Dr. Buist in the last number of the Transactions of the Bombay Geographical Society, on the Physical Geography of India, the following facts are given as to the principal annual falls of rain. In Eastern India and the Bay of Bengal—Cherapunjee, 4,500 feet above the sea level, 610 inches; Sylhet, 5,000 feet, 209 inches; Tavoy, sea level, 208 inches; Moulmein, sea level, 175 inches; Akyah, sea level, 155 inches; Darjeeling, 7,000 feet 125 inches. On the shores of Western India—Mahabuleshwar, 4,500 feet, 248 inches; Attagiri, 2,200 feet, 170 inches; Khandalla, 1,740 feet, 168 inches; Atrimallay, 6,000 feet, 164 inches; Dhapul, 900 feet, 138 inches; Angara Kandy, Malabar coast, 124 inches; Cannanore, Malabar coast, 121 inches. At Bombay there is ordinarily no rain, or only very occasional showers, from November to May inclusive. The average fall for the last thirty years has been June, 22-13 inches; July, 24-88; August, 16-77; September, 11-05; October, 1-25; total, 76-8 inches.

EXPECTED FAMINE.—The Madras Times says famine is pending in the Deccan. There has been an almost total failure of the usual rains, so that the tanks and wells are fast becoming dry. Cholera is consequently spreading. The last great famine in India was in the North West in 1837.

WHAT IS TO BE DONE WITH INDIA.—The London Journals want to know what is to be done with India. They now begin to think it cannot be made to pay its way. They are right, with an important limitation: India will not pay without Government. It is a rich mine, yielding splendid results to men with the wit to work it. Our puppet Government has no particle of that necessary commodity, and by its dull vis inertiae weighs down the national enterprise, which would otherwise convert the now costly satrapy into a prosperous and profitable colony. What is possible in the way of that development of resources—which is a stock phrase of financial peddlers, who will not avail themselves of resources open to them, and can develop nothing but expenditure—is shown in one direction by the half-yearly report of the India General Steam Navigation Company, now before us. The enormous pressure thrown upon them during the mutiny made their returns, of course, exceptional for the time. This is past, but still the report of the company for the half year ending 30th June, shows a net profit of Rs. 4,38,479—paying the shareholders a dividend of 50 per cent. per annum. Not long since the Government snubbed this company, in common with others, for not placing sufficient accommodation at the disposal of the public. Yet the report shows such a flotilla as the following, all new, or lengthened, and thoroughly renewed, within five years past:—

STEAMERS.	H. P.	FLATS.	Tons.
Simla . . .	150	Chumbul . . .	500
Lahore . . .	150	Adjaye . . .	500
Aggra . . .	140	Varoonu . . .	475
Rajmahal . . .	140	Krishna . . .	475
Charles Allen . . .	100	Kalli . . .	425
Bombay . . .	90	Doorgah . . .	425
Madras . . .	90	Lutchmee . . .	400
Lucknow . . .	80	Hoogly . . .	400
Colzong . . .	80	Mutlah . . .	400
Calcutta . . .	80	Goorai . . .	400
		Gunga . . .	400

Not a bad development for a private company yet young. When the mutiny broke out and the helplessly confused Government was without means of sending up troops and stores, this company offered to them their flotilla at the rate of the day, Rs. 18,000 to Rs. 20,000 per trip, under an engagement for six months. The Government declined the offer, and within the six months, owing to the enormous pressure on every means of transit, the public competition for freight compelled them to pay from Rs. 50,000 up to Rs. 70,000 per trip. The simple fact is that the directorate and the manager of the I.G.S.N. Co.

thoroughly understand the affairs under their command, and they develop in their hands accordingly. The Government, on the contrary, has not the slightest comprehension of the business at its command, and involves every interest under its control in the ruin which always attends upon ignorant intermeddling. If England wants us to pay, let her take one modern Old Man of the Sea off Sindbad's shoulders. India is being strangled, give her breath, and a few years will make the State as profitable, on the whole, as this company is in its degree.—Englishman.

NORTH-WESTERN BANK.—The Supreme Court of Calcutta have granted an injunction to restrain the directors of the North-Western Bank, who were ousted by the shareholders at a recent meeting, from further acting or interfering with the property of the bank, contrary to the resolutions of that meeting. The Court granted the injunction against the directors with costs, but refused that part of the application which sought the appointment of a receiver. The Chief Justice said, "the Court cannot make an order appointing Mr. Fergusson receiver, and directing possession of the effects of the bank to be delivered to him. Probably if the Court were to appoint a receiver, they would appoint their own receiver. If the resolution appointing Mr. Fergusson be valid, he will be able to enforce his rights under it."

ANNIVERSARY OF LA MARTINIÈRE, CALCUTTA.—Notwithstanding the extreme heat of the weather, the visitors at La Martinière yesterday, Sept 13th—to witness the celebration of the 24th anniversary of the Institution—amounted to several hundreds. All the available seats were soon filled, and many persons—including ladies—had to stand during the delivery of the sermon and the distribution of the prizes. At twelve o'clock the Governor-general arrived, and as his Excellency, accompanied by the Lord Bishop of Calcutta, entered the Hall, the band struck up the national anthem. The Bishop having read two collects and the Lord's Prayer, the girls of the institution sang a hymn, after which his lordship preached from Philippians iv. 8: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." The sermon ended, the boys sang a hymn, and the Bishop then pronounced the benediction. The Governor-general then distributed the rewards. Ten papier-mâché prizes were given by his Highness the Nawab of Moorshedabad. At the conclusion of this business the children sang "Rule Britannia," after which the Governor-general addressed the assembly, and stated his gratification at the interesting proceedings of the day and the satisfactory state of the institution. His lordship alluded to two pleasing circumstances that had occurred during the past year. The first was the high honours (second wrangler) recently gained at the Cambridge University by Anthony Wilson Steel, a former ward of the institution. The other circumstance was the recent finding at Lucknow of the signet ring of Claude Martin. It was presented to the institution by H. Woodrow, Esq. Over the coat of arms is the motto "Labore et Constantia." His excellency thanked the governors of the institution for their valuable services, and named particularly the Rev. J. C. Herdman, Mr. Cecil Beadon, Sir Charles Jackson, Mr. E. Currie, and the venerable Archdeacon Pratt. The proceedings in the hall were closed by singing "God Save the Queen." The children then adjourned to their separate refectories, and, being seated at table, Lord Canning proposed "The memory of the founder, General Claude Martin," which was drunk in solemn silence.

AKYAB, Sept. 12.—Major Verner went on board the steamer Nemesis a few days ago, and delivered the thanks of the Government to the officers in English, and to the native crew in Hindoostanee, for their laudable and successful exertions on the 1st August, and in rescuing the lives of the one hundred and six individuals from the troop-ship Neptune. The arrival of H. M.'s steamer Pro-

serpine, on the evening of the 8th instant, under the command of Captain Slade, took us rather by surprise. The Nemesis, being relieved by her, proceeds to-day to Calcutta, for repairs; and Captain Goodwin, the commander, being convalescent, and unequal to the anxiety and exertion necessary in taking her to Calcutta, Mr. Porter, the Marine Assistant Commissioner has been deputed by Major Verner, to assist Captain Godwin in his duties so far as may be requisite or desirable. The unfortunate circumstance of Mr. Earle (the chief officer) being under suspension, on a charge of insubordination, has rendered Mr. Porter's services necessary on the Nemesis. The salvage claimed on the goods saved from the wreck of the Tulloch Castle, has been decreed to the claimants, Messrs. Motley and Woodward; half the value of the property saved has been adjudged to them. The station is becoming duller daily; the few whom we have are going away to seek amusement in the gaieties of the City of Palaces. There is a large stock of rice in the interior, which had been kept back with the object of enhancing the market rates; but the Mughls now find that their motive in thus having withheld the usual supplies proved unavailing, and attended with considerable loss to them. May they profit by their dear bought experience.—Hurkaru.

THE CITY OF MUM.—It does not seem to be expected or intended that our new city of Allahabad shall last long, if one may judge from the nature of the building works going on in all directions. The Railway Company, indeed, do seem to aim at some degree of permanence in their constructions; and the Government also, in their works in hand, seem to calculate on use for some little time to come. Little, however, can be said for the majority of other builders of late date, always excepting Messrs. Wilson and Co., whose noble show-rooms, when finished, will be far ahead of all other private buildings here. If houses continue to tumble about as they have been doing during the little bad weather we have had, there will soon be not a house left standing. An earthquake, such as that which occurred at Calcutta last year, would demolish the whole place. Cannington, a magnificent site for a town close to the railway, is a mere collection of superior sized hovels; affairs which would disgust a farmer on the look-out for barns, cornhouses, stables, and granaries. There seems to be a sort of conspiracy afoot between the contractors and builders to secure the necessity of speedily building all works again. The main—indeed the only materials necessary for a capital and spacious house, in our city, are some bamboos, lots of mud in various stages of preparation, lots of straw, very little lime and soorkee—and lots of whitewashing and ornamenting matters. With these materials are built all our best-looking houses of modern date. We know of no place in the world where house builders vie with each other in a gingerbread style of building. Most of the new town of Kuchpoorwa might be demolished, in two hours, by a brigade of moderately-strengthened "navvies" armed with bamboos. It is a question whether the place would stand an hour's fall of such hailstones as often fall at Darjeeling. It is really a pity that in assigning sites by Government care was not had to compel the erection of substantial buildings or none.—Commercial Gazette.

JEYPURE.—The Delhi Gazette publishes a letter from Pundit Shodeen, Dewan Secretary, to the Maharaja of Jeypore, contradicting the report recently published in the North-West papers, that much discontent prevailed among the people in Jeypore, in consequence of the British Government having intimated to the Jeypore Raja its intention of disarming his subjects. The Pundit denies any such intimation having been made to the Jeypore Government.

BURNING OF THE "SHAH JEHAN."—A short time ago the Vasco de Gama, Captain Maureau, arrived at Reunion, bringing with him the captain of the Shah Jehan, his three officers, and sixty lascars, whom he had picked up at sea, in two boats, when they were in the last stage of starva-vation and misery. They had escaped from their ship, which was destroyed by fire. The Shah Jehan, bound from Calcutta to the Mauritius, laden with rice, oil, &c., had on board, besides her crew, 350 emigrant coolies. About 10 A.M. on the 27th of June, smoke was observed rising thickly through the fore-hatch, and immediately a cry of fire was heard. They at first tried to go down by the orlop, but the smoke was so thick that it was impossible to remain below, and every one on board was driven to the upper deck. The conviction that the ship was extensively on fire brought terror to the hearts of all. Not a ship was to be seen, and the coolies, women, and children covered in affright on the deck. The captain and his officers did all they could to reassure them, and every exertion which men can make with so terrible a prospect before them, as they now had, was made. The crew tried to carry buckets of water below, but could not for the smoke. All efforts in this direction failed. The fire rapidly gained upon them. Men who had gone down for fresh water some time before, and found all clear, now saw that it was impossible to get to the tanks. The smell which arose from the hold clearly proved that the oil had taken fire, explaining the explosions which were heard; each cask of oil as it took fire burst, and spread the destructive element throughout the ship. The captain caused all the scuttles to be closed up with wetted sails, and poured water through holes cut in the decks. They worked for a long time at this, but without success. The flames began to rise through the starboard hatch. Captain Betham and his people were able at first to prevent this, and reduced the flames here with wet sails. The whole day and night were spent in the most desperate efforts to suppress the fire, but the flames rose again, and appeared more terrible in the darkness of the night. At daylight of the 28th the horizon was anxiously scanned, but not a sail gladdened their eyes. The fire was hourly increasing, and it became clear that the case was hopeless. The captain ordered the launch and another boat to be got out, coolies were placed on them to keep them constantly wet and protect them from the fire. The next thing was to see to the provisions, but to their horror it was found they could get at nothing; neither fresh water nor food. To escape in three boats, from a ship on fire, hundreds of miles from land, without food or water, seemed but a choice of a worse fate. In the course of the day the fire burned a large hole on the starboard side, scaffoldings were got out, and the captain placed numbers of coolies upon them, who poured water incessantly through the opening, and this they did with some success, for towards the evening the flames had disappeared. On the morning of the third day, since the fire had been discovered, heavy clouds began to overspread the sky above. The decks of the ship became so hot as to render it impossible to stand upon them, and the captain concluded that the hold was one mass of fire. It was now absolutely necessary to abandon the ship, but before doing so, he made one more attempt to get at the provisions. A lascar volunteered to go between decks. They covered him with clothes and thick blankets well wetted, and then lowered him with a rope. In less than a minute the signal to haul up was felt, and the lascar was brought up nearly senseless. The rafts they had made were now dropped into the water, and the ship was put before the wind, the flames bursting out in awful volumes before the foremast. The coolies threw themselves overboard in all directions, some 300 getting upon the rafts, and about sixty remaining on board. One boat still hung over the side of the ship, which they took possession of. A terrible scene now took place. On the captain and sailors leaving the vessel, the unhappy creatures left on the burning ship, the coolies, surrounded the captain, seizing him by his clothes and limbs, weeping, and begging of him not to leave them; watching his opportunity, as nothing more remained in his power, he threw himself overboard into the water, and in a little time was taken on board the launch. The number on board the launch and boat, including the captain and doctor, was sixty-seven people, whose prospects were but little better than those of the unfortunate coolies left on board the burning ship or on the rafts. More than fifty of the coolies threw themselves into the boat alongside the ship, the ropes broke, and they were all precipitated into the sea never to rise again. Now the mizen-mast tottered and fell over the side on the rafts, smashing everything in its fall. The captain could now do no more. "He bid an eternal adieu to his ship, to the men on the rafts and dropped a tear upon the victims." They hoisted sail on the launch, and steered towards the west, in the hope of reaching the Mauritius, which was still 800 miles distant. Captain John de Betham and his companions floated for a long time without seeing a sail, broken with fatigue, supporting themselves on a daily ration of a handful of rice or grain, and half a glass of water, or when rain fell receiving the refreshing drops in their mouths. For four days these shipwrecked men pursued their hopeless way—the leaky boats being with difficulty kept afloat. In this frightful condition Captain Betham never lost his courage; he had confidence in God, in God who had already saved him from the fire, and who would not now permit him to perish. On the fifth day two men died; the survivors deeply struck lay prostrate and motionless. However, the hour of deliverance had arrived; about ten o'clock a sail came in sight, the intelligence was received with frantic shouts, and they immediately steered towards it. In a few hours the shipwrecked men were on board the Vasco de Gama, which had lain to the moment the boats were seen from her deck. One man more died immediately after being taken on board. Captain de Betham and his sixty-three companions are at Reunion, and he speaks in the most grateful terms of the kindness, attention, and hospitality of Captain Maureau of the Vasco de Gama, who so fortunately came to the rescue when himself and crew were at the point of death.—Englishman.

A RELAPSE.—A native youth, who had recently been converted, has since apostatized. The young man was made a convert about two months ago, when he happened to encounter some of his relatives in a street, who persuaded him to return to his house, on the plea of some member of his family being indisposed. There he was easily led to recant his new doctrines, and was made to undergo a ceremony called the Praschitya, which restored him to his caste once more.

CALCUTTA "GUP."—The Hurkaru observes that notwithstanding the recent appointments of Sir Bartle Frere and Mr. Wilson, it is stated in official circles, apparently on good authority, that the Executive Councils are doomed, and will probably be abolished next year. Sir B. Frere, it is said, will be provided for in the Bombay Presidency. Mr. Ricketts, it is believed, will be compelled by the state of his health to retire, and Sir James Outram will probably be offered the command-in-chiefship of one of the minor Presidencies, should he be disposed to remain in India. Mr. Wilson is not likely to remain more than a year in this country.

INCOME TAX BILL.—At a public meeting which was held in Calcutta on the 12th Sept., Messrs. Mackinlay, Doane, Bell, Bullen, Ferguson, Theobald, Remfey, and Fitzwilliam were the speakers, and petitions to the Legislative Council and Parliament, embodying the views set forth in the following resolutions were agreed to. "1. That the Bill entitled 'a Bill for the Licensing of Trades and Professions' is wholly wrong in principle as well as in detail, and this meeting protests against such a Bill being passed, and against any system of taxation which does not press equally on all classes and sources of income, and it is of opinion that one of the fairest and most proper systems of taxation for this country is an equitable income and property tax. 2.—That this meeting is of opinion that the Indian community is, as a condition of taxation, entitled to the fullest information from the Government of India with regard to the expenditure and income of the empire, and to have a full financial statement laid annually before the Legislative Council. 3.—That the Legislative Council, as at present constituted, is wholly unfitted for the purpose of legislating for this country, and that it is absolutely necessary that it be reformed by the addition of independent and practical men as members, and that the Executive Council be abolished as causing a heavy expenditure without corresponding advantage. 4. That in the opinion of this meeting it is desirable that a Parliamentary commission should be sent out to India, without delay, to make a full local inquiry into the general state of the finances of India, and into the causes of the discontent and distrust that exist with respect to the present administration of the Government." It is estimated by the Calcutta papers that upwards of two thousand persons were present at the meeting.

CIRCUMLOCUTION.—According to the Phoenix, some curious statistical facts have resulted from calculations lately made in the public offices in Calcutta. It appears that in one well-known Government office the number of words written in the course of a month sometimes amounts to 800,000. The monthly average number of words is in excess of 500,000.

GOLD CURRENCY.—The Calcutta papers publish a letter from the Chamber of Commerce to Lord Canning, in which a gold currency for India is advocated. In a former letter the Chamber had recommended twenty sovereigns as the maximum legal tender for gold; to this the Governor-General refused to accede. In the present letter the Chamber say they will be thankful if any smaller amount down to two sovereigns is sanctioned by Government. The reply of the Governor-general has not yet been published.

EXPORTS (Calcutta, Sept. 22).—There is no material change to notice in our export trade; the market during the last fortnight has been in the same inactive state as before; the advices from home, which have continued to be received, being of the same discouraging nature, do not cause any inducement to increased transactions. In Sugar we have to report an almost entire absence of business for the home markets; transactions have been chiefly confined to Bombay, at prices showing in some instances a small reduction. Salt-petre has been less operated in for Great Britain, but it has been in fair request for America. Rice has continued almost neglected for Great Britain, but the fine table sort (Seta) has been actively engaged for Melbourne at extraordinarily high price. Moonghy and Balum continue in great demand for Mauritius, Bourbon, Guip, and other places. Lined has remained without alteration in either demand or price. Rope has been in moderate demand. Hide has experienced a further reduction in value. Hides have been in rather moderate demand.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Sept. 22).—The market has remained, and still continues, as unsatisfactory and depressed as last represented. Buyers can now to experience the same difficulty in clearing old purchases, and thus, coupled with the very limited demand, tends to prevent new business, and as the native annual festival of the Doorga Poojan is fast approaching, and will commence on the 1st of October, and last twelve days, no business of any importance is expected to be done till about the end of next month. Mule Trist has been sold to a very small extent, the demand being for Nos. 30 and 40, for the holidays. Prints and Chintzes have continued in very limited inquiry at a further fall of 4 annas per piece in price. Turkey Red Goods have also been in very limited demand. Grey Shirtings have continued to move off with difficulty, and have fallen 2 to 3 annas per piece. Grey Mappans and Cambries are quite neglected. Grey Jacquets and Mulls have been in very limited inquiry and lower in value about one anna on medium and low qualities. Black Shirtings, viz.: Shirtings are in limited local requirement at 1 1/2 to 2 annas per piece lower. Jacquets of medium and low quality have continued at the last reduction in price. Mull Muls fine, Lapets, Spots, Shirtings, and Sarries are only taken for the approaching fest. Woolens are unexpectedly dull at this time of the year. Metals continue much about the same as before.

MADRAS.

JUDICIAL OATHS.

The Government of Madras has taken pains to ascertain public opinion on the re-introduction of oaths. In every district the officials and all natives of standing have been requested to send in written opinions, and the result is a mass of evidence of very considerable value. In one or two instances the district seems to have followed the Collector's opinion, but in the majority the replies are obviously original. A large majority of the witnesses are in favour of speedy and certain punishment for perjury. All consider that oaths are in a high degree offensive to the better educated classes of Hindoos. But there is some disparity of opinion as to the precise effect of oaths on the minds of the lower orders of natives. Some say they respect them, and instance the habitual reference of private quarrels to that kind of decision. Disputes about land, property, debts and caste are often settled by what would in older times have been called an oath of expurgation. One Collector says:—

"In a suit to recover on a deed of sale the defendant declared his readiness to withdraw all opposition if the plaintiff would, after bathing in the Cauvery, state, with the ramayanum in his hand, that the consideration embraced by the deed had not been received by him. Plaintiff refused to do this, but stated that he was willing to take the usual solemn affirmation in court. It was understood," Mr. Grenfell adds, "that plaintiff's claim was untenable."

This oath, however, must always, to be sacred, be taken in a temple, or on some visible object of reverence. V. Ramiah, head sheristadar of Tanjore, puts this point with some ability:—

"With the majority of the people, oaths," he thinks, "may be used with advantage. The native population may not," he says, "have a correct idea of a future state of rewards and punishments, but they are superstitious in the extreme, and oaths in forms suited to their religious belief are calculated to strike terror into them. A mere declaration is lost on such men, . . . a mere formula, conveying no idea or image to the mind, but called upon to swear upon the ramayanum, or in the name of their village goddess, which they revere and adore as the preserver of themselves and their cattle from pestilence and from famine, they are at once put upon their guard, and there is a strong guarantee for their speaking the truth, however much the temptation may be the other way."

All the witnesses who touch this point believe that an actual visible deity must be present to frighten the people. Cherchal Row, however, sheristadar of a sub division of Rajahmundry, holds that even under such circumstances the oath would be without efficacy. He gives his reasons at length:—

I. "The impossibility of obtaining a conscientious regard as to what is uttered in consequence of the character and diversity of religious belief, some persons maintaining complete annihilation on the cessation of the present state; some the temporary duration only of future punishment, while others rest in the doctrine of transmigration of life, which, in its hold on the conscience is feeble, compared with the conviction of the eternity of punishment. Some maintain, it is added, that man is a passive agent only, and in no way morally accountable.

II. "That the Hindoo moral code sanctions perjury when committed, 'to save a cow or a Brahmin, to prevent the loss of character, money or life, or to make a marriage valid or practicable.' 'There is not a native,' it is added, 'he be the highest official or the most learned Pundit, that will not consider it an honour to commit a perjury to save thereby a man's life or help a Brahmin.' Almost every case, it is justly observed, may be brought within these exceptions.

III. "The facility of obtaining purification, viz., by bathing in the Ganges, by the gift of a few annas to a Brahmin."

The Hindoo Patriot will perhaps consider that statement from a Brahmin sufficient to justify ours of the same tenor. If it were not inconvenient to print Sanscrit in an English dress we would quote the original shloks conveying the command he has the audacity to deny. We have never asserted that no oath will bind a Hindoo. Our contention is simply that the respectable Hindoos whom an oath would bind will not take it, and the mass are totally incapable of fearing any consequences not immediately present to their eyes.

An oath, then, by the testimony of an entire Presidency, to be really valid must be made in a temple, or before a god. Even under those circumstances it is valueless in capital cases, or any case in which a Brahmin is concerned. As this ceremony with its partial validity is in the present state of English feeling impossible, the question of restoring oaths may be considered out of Court.

What, then, is to be the substitute? The universal feeling at Madras is that the affirmation is valueless. It is not considered binding, and is not very often understood. The very words, says one witness, are difficult of pronunciation. The idea that anybody should speak the truth without compulsion of some kind seems not to have entered the witnesses' heads. The oath, then, being impossible, and the affirmation nugatory, there remains the terror of certain and speedy punishment. In Masulipatam the native officials agree that with speedy punishment oaths would be unnecessary. Those of Cuddapah declare that false testimony in court is so common because punishment is so uncertain. The head sheristadar of Arcot believes the affirmation only fails from the difficulty of punishing the perjurer. He would punish on the spot, calling a jury of five then and there to decide if witness had perjured himself or not. It was the general opinion in Tinnevely—till somebody suggested that if oaths were restored the Bramhins would get appointments—that a mere warning to tell the truth should be followed by punishment. The Canarese are wholly in favour of prompt punishment. Not one opinion is recorded against such a measure, which indeed is in consonance with all native habits and usages. We sincerely hope the reform will not be allowed to drop. Mr Forbes' Bill has been wisely withdrawn, but the diminution of perjury is the key to all future reform. Unless we can secure some approximation to the truth our Courts must remain, as they are now, worse than useless. Swift punishment doubtless will not secure truth in every case. But it will secure it whenever the witness has not a distinct and important interest in lying. It will make the trade of witnessing for money excessively dangerous and expensive, and thus deprive the wretches who practise it of at least four fifths of their emoluments. Four annas will not compensate a man for six months' imprisonment, though four annas a day pays him for the only risk he now runs, that of being acquitted once a twelvemonth.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIR ALEXANDER GRANT.—The appointment of Sir Alexander Grant, bart., to the Educational Inspectorship in Madras has been warmly canvassed by some of the papers. One journal characterises it as an act of gross jobbery for Sir Charles Trevelyan to make room for his private friends in such an office. Sir Alexander writes to the journals that before coming to India he had not the honour of being on terms of personal friendship with Sir Charles. He was recommended to his notice by persons connected with various departments of education in England, and had the pleasure of seeing him for the first time at the Treasury with reference to being employed in Madras. If a man who is a baronet, a distinguished fellow of Oriel, admirable as an editor of Aristotle, and an Examiner in the London University, is not fit for an Indian Inspectorship of Education, who is? It is acknowledged there is not a man in the whole department competent to fill the post, and yet he is sneered at as an outsider, and the Government accused of jobbery.

PUBLIC WORKS.—Sir Charles Trevelyan has directed that in procuring supplies of materials for Public Works in Madras, the following principles shall be always acted on:—"1st. The plan of having fixed prices for materials and labour should be abandoned. 2nd. The materials and other articles required should be obtained by contracts entered into after advertisements in the Government Gazette, in which a careful specification should be given of what is wanted. 3rd. The articles furnished by the contractors should be subjected to a careful inspection of the time of their delivery, and if they fall short of the specification, they should be rejected. 4th. The full current market rate of wages should be given to each description of workmen, care being taken that a fair day's work is obtained for a fair day's wage.

INCOME-TAX BILL.—A large public meeting was held on September 22, at which petitions to the Legislative Council and to Parliament against the proposed bill were adopted. The objections to the bill are thus clearly stated in the petition to the Legislative Council. "1. Because no information has been given either to your Honorable Council or the public of the financial requirements of Government, so as to afford the means of judging whether an enormous tax of this character be absolutely necessary. 2. Because, instead of being an ordinary licensing act, it imposes on trade a very heavy burden, which is avowedly an income-tax. 3. Because the proposed act will be unjust in its operation. Being in the nature of an income-tax, it does not equally affect all classes of the community, but exempts owners of realised property and others. This meeting, therefore, earnestly remonstrates against an income-tax to be imposed solely on the fruits of industry. 4. Because the machinery by which the Act is proposed to be worked appears to be so defective and arbitrary that great public injury will probably result. 5. Because by the provisions of the Act the schedule of classification is to be made public, by which any person will be able to arrive at a knowledge of the profits of his neighbour's business or profession." The petitioners then go on to admit the necessity which exists of increasing the public revenue, and add that they "will cheerfully support any measure for the fair and equal taxation of all classes." A resolution, thanking Sir Barnes Peacock, Sir Charles Jackson, and Mr. Sconce for the manly and independent course of action which they adopted with regard to the Bill, was carried unanimously. The petition to Parliament is the one that was forwarded a few months ago to the Secretary of State for India when the new Tariff Act came into operation. Its prayer was, that representative councils, suited to the present state of India, might be introduced.

SUNDAY LABOUR.—The Madras Government have made public a correspondence between the Director of Revenue Settlement and the Superintendent of Revenue Survey on the subject of Sunday labour. The deputy of the former had, in accordance with the standing orders of Government, informed some villagers in Masulipatam that they were not bound to supply coolies on Sunday for survey purposes. The latter is indignant that the survey should be stopped on Sunday; 100 working days each year are thus lost; there is a diminution of 150 square miles in the out-turn of work annually; the ameens and their gomastahs take advantage of the day to visit their homes at some distance, and return unfit for anything but nominal work on Monday. The director answers, if the ameens work on Sunday, Christians must superintend them. In the long run, nothing is lost by submitting to physical laws, such as that which apply to Sunday rest, sanctioned as it is by Divine authority, notwithstanding ostensible arbitrary calculations to the contrary. If the ameens are unfit for work on Monday, proper supervision will check the abuse. It is unnecessary "to urge the point on the higher ground that a Christian government should repudiate the unnecessary employment of Sunday labour in such a great national work as the survey."

AN "UNTOWARD EVENT."—The Madras Daily Times relates a fatal accident that occurred at Vaniembetty (Salem), on the morning of the 3rd September. A Mr. King, of the electric telegraph department, had gone out shooting. Before returning home he wished to discharge his gun, and levelled it at a dog. At this moment two Mussulmans approached him towards the left, one of them crying out, "No sir, no sir," to arrest his intention. Mr. A. turned round to the speaker, and the gun was discharged. The bullet unfortunately struck the man, entering his cheek a little below the right eye, and coming out behind the left ear. He fell down dead. Mr. King had the body put in his bandy, while he rode on in front to the Traveller's Bungalow. In a short time a mob assembled, and though the native authorities were on the spot, it was with the utmost difficulty that Mr. K. was conveyed to the Choultry. The people were violent to him on the way. He was slapped and cuffed, abused, spit at, and pushed over a wall. Information having been sent to the head assistant magistrate at Tripatore, Mr. Boswell arrived at Vanimbuddy the same evening, and had Mr. K. conveyed, under cover of night, to Tripatore, where an inquiry has taken place. The accounts of the accident are contradictory. One version states that Mr. King fired at the dog, but that the cap missed; that he cocked the gun again, and aimed at the dog. That when he was addressed by the Mussulman, he turned round, took aim at him and fired. The other version is that the hammer was never raised a second time, that the cap hung fire which he aimed at the dog. On deceased addressing Mr. K. the gun went off while he was in the act of ascertaining who it was that spoke to him.

RAJAH OF TRAVANCORE.—The Cochin Courier represents the Rajah of Travancore as a mere puppet in the hands of his Dewan and General Cullen, the Resident. The liberal tendencies of the Rajah were certainly at one time strong, and this fact will account for recent acts of intolerance and oppression. In opposition to the Rajah's wishes, the Dewan, with the advice of the Resident, is said to have invested Rs. 50,000 in Government Securities, at a time when the finances could not allow of such a strain.

COOLIE EMIGRATION.—The Madras Spectator notices the departure of the first batch of coolies form that Presidency for Trinidad, engaged by Mr. Warner, the Emigration Agent for the West Indies.

CAPTAIN J. G. R. FORLONG, of the 1st M.N.I., has been appointed, by the Supreme Government, an Executive Engineer of the 1st class, and directed to proceed to Singapore on special duty.

THE NEW PIER.—The first screw of the Madras pier was turned by his Excellency Sir Charles Trevelyan on the 17th September, in the presence of a large assemblage of the elite of the Presidency. After an appropriate prayer had been offered up by the Rev. Mr. Dealtry, the Acting Archdeacon, his Excellency delivered an address, in which he referred to the benefits a pier would confer on this port, and to the many improvements that had been effected in the administration of Madras since his arrival.

VALUABLE TIMBER.—The Executive Engineer of Shway Geen and Sittang writes to the Government of Madras on the virtues of the timber, said to be indigenous to Burmah, and known by the native name of Pyengadow. From its being impervious to white ants and resisting the action of the weather it is admirably adapted for railway sleepers. There are bridges in Burmah of sixty and seventy years' standing over tidal nullahs, but there is no mark of decay on the Pyengadow, of which the piers are constructed. The tree abounds in Martaban. It grows to the height of thirty and forty feet without a branch, and varies in girth up to eight and nine feet. Its average cost delivered in any of the Sittang stations is from six to eight annas per six inch cubic foot. Though heavier than water, it can be easily floated when mixed with bamboos. Is this not the same wood found so largely in Western Australia?

COFFEE BUG.—The Madras Spectator mentions a curious kind of tree bug which is destructive to coffee plants. It is found on the bark of the tree under the ground, encased in a kind of silk covering. No sooner is the tree attacked by the insect than it immediately begins to wither and decay. Coal tar is found effectual in destroying the bug, and it is rubbed on the stem down to the roots. The Ceylon Times suggests the application of sulphur to the Coffee plant in Ceylon, so often ravaged by the same species of bug, which recently attacked the plant in Mercara for the first time. There can be no doubt that sulphur has been effectually tried on blighted vines, potatoes, fruit trees and green crops. When ground very small and dusted from a large tin pepper box a woman can dress an acre in a day. After ten days the drooping crop becomes healthy. This plan has the advantage over coal tar, that the amount of labour necessary to rub each individual plant with the latter would be too costly.

THE VELLORE ROBBERY.—Through the exertions of Mr. Robinson the chief culprit in the robbery of the cash-chest at the Vellore station, some months ago, has been discovered. The delinquent turns out to be the cash-keeper himself. The gang robbery was a mere ruse to divert suspicion from the chief appropriator, and the value of the plunder on the occasion was but a fraction of what was really abstracted.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MUNDLAISIR.—The following letter on the subject of the recent outbreak at the Mundlaisir gaol has been addressed to the Bombay Gazette by Mr. Williams, Civil Surgeon at that station:—
"Dear Sir,—I see a paragraph in your paper of the 29th, containing an account of the late outbreak in the gaol at this place, copied from the Telegraph and Courier. It says that the prisoners overpowered the gaol guard and escaped into the fort. Why, the fort is the gaol. The prisoners certainly did overpower the guards, killing two, one of the 10th N.I. and a Burkundaz, and wounding four of the 19th, two only slightly, the others dangerously. They then shut the gates of the fort and commenced a heavy fire from the ramparts on those outside. The detachment of the 19th was soon on the spot, placed under cover of some houses, and kept up a brisk fire at the loopholes of the fort and at anyone that showed his head above the walls. Poor Captain Hawes was wounded early in the day, but would not go home. At two o'clock two guns were sent from Mheysur, a place belonging to Holkar, four miles from this; they arrived at about five o'clock. Captain Hawes was killed while leading a party of the 19th in support of the guns. The correspondent of the Telegraph says the cause of the outbreak was that Captain Hawes was making the gaol into a place for punishment, and not a place of enjoyment, as it had previously been. The person who wrote this is not sufficiently acquainted with the matter. I believe there are only one or two persons in Mhow who lately visited Mundlaisir, and one of them was here at the time the letter to the Telegraph must have been written. Now, I have been here for nearly two years, and I know that Captain Hawes, who was acting for Major Keatinge, did not work the prisoners one hour longer than Major Keatinge had done; the only alteration he made was to stop them making Dossotee, and set them to work making Tat, which is much the same kind of work. Captain Hawes often told me that he wished to have things go on as much as possible as in his predecessor's time. The men were certainly in Major Keatinge's time allowed to change some of their rations for tobacco. This Captain Hawes stopped, which is the only alteration he made, to my knowledge, and I was in the gaol every day of my life. I write this because I consider that in saying that the gaol was formerly only a place of enjoyment casts a reflection on Major Keatinge, who is at present at home; and I am certain there was not a better-managed gaol or district in Central India than this was when Major Keatinge had charge. The prisoners were on the point of making a similar attempt about ten months ago, but were betrayed, and precautions were taken against them. About three hundred prisoners escaped, but there are now below a hundred at large. The force from Mhow was too late. The number of our killed was five; wounded, fifteen.—I am, dear sir, yours faithfully, H. L. WILLIAMS, civil surgeon, Mundlaisir.—Mundlaisir, Sept. 3, 1859."

VALUE OF LAND.—As an instance of the want of room in Bombay, and the consequent value of land, the Standard says the municipal commissioner had recently to pay at the rate of Rs. 7-6-5 per foot for a strip of 168 square feet in Breach Candy road. This is at the rate of thirty thousand pounds sterling an acre.

WHITE ANTS.—The Bombay Town Hall seems to have been taken possession of by white ants. The libraries of the Asiatic and Geographical Societies, the papers in several Government offices, and the organic contents of the Museum, are exposed to destruction.

THE ENAM COMMISSION.—The Bombay Times has obtained and published some papers of the Enam Commission not intended to see the light. According to the local Government, they must have been obtained by breach of confidence, and the clerks of the department have been suspended. According to the Bombay Times, they there has been no breach of faith whatsoever on the part of China. Meanwhile the American envoy, John Ward, did abide by his engagement with Kweiliang and his colleague, sailed to the ports of Peh-tang, and begged for permission to go up to the capital, to present a letter from his government. We accordingly authorized his admission into Peking to present it, and having this day perused the letters addressed by the American envoy, John Ward, to Kweiliang and Hwashana and laid before us by those ministers, we find their language so respectful, the true-heartedness that has prompted them such, that we have authorized the envoy in question to present the letter he is charged with from his government to Kweiliang, and his colleague, whom we have sent to receive it. As regards the exchange of his treaty, he ought properly to return to Shanghai and exchange it there; but in consideration of the long voyage he has made, we [are pleased] specially to authorise that the seal be appended to the treaty, and that it be delivered to Hangfuh to hand it in exchange [for another copy] to the aforesaid envoy, that from the date of the exchange there may be peace and commerce for evermore. Thus do we manifest our great desire to show a nursing tenderness to the men from afar, and our appreciation of good faith and right principle. Let Kweiliang and Hwashana signify this our pleasure to the envoy John Ward for his information. Respect this!"—North China Herald.

FUNERAL OF PIH-KWEI.—On Tuesday, August 16, Pihkwei's remains were conveyed from his yamun to the temple of longevity, in the western suburbs, there to await the orders of the Emperor as to the time they shall be taken to Peking for burial. The procession started about 7 o'clock a.m., and at the same time the guns in the (Pih-kwei) Yamun and on the heights thundered forth a parting salute to the late Governor of Canton. The procession was a long one, extending from Pih-kwei's to the yamun of the Allied Commissioners, and was very much after the fashion of all Chinese processions. First walked the mandarins with the usual number of red umbrellas, followed by all the minions of the departed—runners, executioners, and scoundrelly-looking gaoles dangling chains in their hands, and looking as if they had been selected for these offices on account of their hideous and forbidding aspect; next followed gongs and a band playing some doleful air, nearly allied to the dead march, succeeded again by a horde of dirty little boys dressed in scarlet robes, carrying boards with gilt characters, setting forth the names and various ranks of the mandarins present. Then two military gentlemen with their quivers, full of arrows, long boots, and other finery, followed immediately by the two empty chairs of State (one covered, one uncovered, of the deceased, each supported by eight bearers). A band of juveniles, fancifully and fantastically dressed, then shed their harmony around, succeeded by the bier on which the body was borne. This was the only thing worth seeing, and it was magnificent. It was shaped after the manner of a chair, about 10 to 12 feet long, and 6 feet broad, made of fine silk, with figures of dragons and other devices cunningly shown upon it, having a large yellow ball on the top and yellow frames running drawn from it to the four corners, the edges being finished off with a deep red silk fringe. Inside was the coffin, the whole being borne along by thirty-two coolies, sixteen at each end. It was so long as to be got only with difficulty along the narrow streets. The procession was closed by about twenty chairs, most of which had women or children inside, and were closely curtained round and covered with black. Yeh lies in a temple in the eastern suburbs, and Pih-kwei in another in the western suburbs,—the two men who brought on a war with the foreigner having gone to their final resting-place about the same time."

MR. B. H. ELLIS, acting secretary in the revenue department, is to succeed Sir Bartle Frere as commissioner in Sind. We are not at all astonished at this nomination, considering the great experience Mr. Ellis has had in the administration of the affairs of Sind.

CEYLON.

COLOMBO, Sept. 30.—His Excellency the Governor has been forced to seek a change of air in consequence of an attack of fever, but we are glad to learn that his health is improving.

The weather is all that can be desired for the coming crop, which is ripening rapidly in the lower districts. But as it has been stormy here the preparation and shipment of coffee have been interrupted. There have been no clearances during the fortnight.

Labour is still scarce, and in some places a little alarm is manifesting itself. The arrivals by the Manchester are small, she has made but two trips since our last, bringing 229 coolies on the one occasion, and 150 on the other.

The attention of mariners has been drawn to the fact that the lighthouse at this port is to undergo repairs from 1st February to the 1st April 1860, and it is stated that during that period a light, "upon which much dependence cannot be placed," will be put on the clock tower in the fort. The master attendant says "it is worthy of remark, that if soundings off Ceylon be got between thirty and forty fathoms, the ship is within five or six leagues of the land, and had better not near till daylight."

The only item of religious intelligence is the formation of a Branch of the Christian Vernacular Education Society, by the efforts of Mr. Murdoch. —Overland Observer.

THE STRAITS.

BANJERMASSING.—It having been reported that the rebels had collected in an old stone fort at Tabanio, on the sea shore, which some years previously had been abandoned by the Dutch, a reconnoitering party was detached in that direction, consisting of two armed boats with twenty infantry. As soon as they came under the fire of the rebels, two officers of the navy were wounded, two men killed, and several others wounded. As nothing could be done against the fort, the boats retired. Colonel Andersen immediately afterwards proceeded with a considerable force in the steamers Celebes and Boni, for the purpose of attacking this place.

MUSULMAN PILGRIMS.—A decree abolishing slavery in Java has been published. Henceforth no Mussulman will be allowed to leave Netherlands India on a pilgrimage to Mecca without a passport from the governor. It has been found that out of 12,986 persons to whom passes had been given for Mecca within the past six years only 5,594 had returned. None will be allowed to wear the dress of Hadjis, nor to receive certificates of Hadjship, who shall not return their passports duly vised by the Dutch consuls on the route, under a penalty of from 25fr. to 100fr. This will certainly reduce the vile Hadji tribe who infest the East, and prevent much of the misery caused by the poor attempting to visit Mecca. The old repressive policy is thus somewhat strangely justified.

DECREASE OF NATIVE POPULATION.—The Penang Gazette asserts that the native population of the Indian Archipelago is steadily decreasing. The native Governments are in a state of absolute prostration. The aggregate population of the whole Eastern Peninsula is now very little in excess of that of Malacca alone in the fifteenth century. There are not five thousand people in the one hundred and twenty miles between Singapore and Malacca, excluding the Tumungong's gambier and gutta percha people near Singapore. The reason of this is evident. Wherever the European settles he draws around him a large population. Laying claim as the Dutch have done to almost the whole of the Archipelago, and yet unable to civilise it, and discouraged as the English have been by an ignorant home policy from civilising any but small spots, the power of the native ruler is destroyed, and no Government has taken its place. Men like Rajah Brooke were understood and appreciated only in the days of Elizabeth and Cromwell.

A GRIEVANCE.—The spice planters in the Straits, already suffering from disease in their trees and diminished prices, have had an additional source of loss inflicted upon them by the Government of India. Hitherto, spices from the Straits settlements, with certificates of origin, have been admitted free of duty in Indian ports, but a reference having been made on this point by the collector of customs at Madras, the Supreme Government has ordered that no exemptions from customs duties are to be made beyond those specified in Act VII. of 1859. Spices are not exempted by this Act, but on the contrary, are taxed at twenty per cent. ad valorem, which will effectually exclude Straits spices from the Indian market.

ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH OFFICE.—A building of an ornamental character is about to be erected in Singapore for the Electric Telegraph Company. It will contain rooms for the India and Europe, and the Java and Australia departments. The line between Java and Singapore will be completed by the end of the year. There is still nothing done to complete the communication with Europe by a line from Calcutta to Rangoon.

A COCK-AND-A-BULL STORY.—A recent Batavia newspaper reports the following curious and singular incident:—"A young Dutch gentleman, living four or five miles from Batavia, had for a long time been engaged to a young lady in Holland. On the 6th January of the current year he took his seat at the breakfast-table as usual, but appeared so dejected that the family with whom he boarded inquired the cause of his melancholy, when he said that his betrothed Jane, in Holland, 'died this morning.' By reason and ridicule his friends tried to dispel the idea from his mind; he desired them, however, in a serious manner to mark the date, and expressed his belief that his foreboding would be verified. A few months after, a letter was received by the Overland Mail from Holland, announcing that the young lady in question died on the 6th January at 10 a.m., so that allowing for the difference of time between Java and Holland his betrothed was dead at the time mentioned. This adds another instance of clairvoyant presentiments."

THE ORIENTAL BANK.—A meeting was held on the 27th at the offices, Threadneedle-street, H. G. Gordon, Esq., in the chair, for the purpose of declaring a dividend. This was the first meeting convened under the supplemental charter, which gave them the power to call a meeting to declare a dividend, instead of adhering to the former practice of communicating the fact to the shareholders by letters. The supplemental charter further gave a power to the shareholders to register shares in two names. A dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum for the half year ending June 30 was declared, payable on and after Tuesday, Nov. 1. The chairman stated that the affairs of the bank were in a prosperous condition.

No. 601 of July 4, will be allowed to remain in India if they desire it, provided they are of good character, each case being submitted to army head quarters for the decision of Government thereon.

THE VICTORIA CROSS.

WAR OFFICE, Oct. 21.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her intention to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross on the undermentioned officers and private soldiers of her Majesty's Indian Military Forces, whose claims to the same have been submitted for her Majesty's approval, on account of acts of bravery performed by them in India, as recorded against their several names, viz.:

5th Bengal European Cavalry.—Major Charles John Stanley Gough: First, for gallantry in an affair at Khurkawah, near Rhotick, on the 15th of August, 1857, in which he saved his brother, who was wounded, and killed two of the enemy. Secondly, for gallantry on the 18th of August, when he led a troop of the Guide cavalry in a charge, and cut down two of the enemy's Sowars, with one of whom he had a desperate hand-to-hand combat. Thirdly, for gallantry on the 27th of January, 1858, at Shunshabad, where, in a charge, he attacked one of the enemy's leaders and pierced him with his sword, which was carried out of his hand in the mélée. He defended himself with his revolver, and shot two of the enemy. Fourthly, for gallantry on the 23rd of February, at Meangunge, where he came to the assistance of Brevet-Major O. H. St. George Anson, and killed his opponent, immediately afterwards cutting down another of the enemy in the same gallant manner.

60th Bengal Native Infantry.—Brevet Captain Robert Haydon Shebbare: For distinguished gallantry at the head of the Guides with the 4th column of assault at Delhi, on the 14th of September, 1857, when, after twice charging beneath the wall of the loopholed serai, it was found impossible, owing to the murderous fire, to attain the breach. Captain (then Lieutenant) Shebbare endeavoured to reorganise the men, but one-third of the Europeans having fallen, his efforts to do so failed. He then conducted the rear-guard of the retreat across the canal most successfully. He was most miraculously preserved through the affair, but yet left the field with one bullet through his cheek, and a bad scalp wound along the back of his head from another.

19th Madras Native Infantry.—Captain Herbert Mackworth Clogstoun: For conspicuous bravery in charging the rebels into Chichumbah with only eight men of his regt. (the 2nd Cav. Hyderabad Contingent), compelling them to re-enter the town, and finally to abandon their plunder. He was severely wounded himself, and lost seven out of the eight men who accompanied him. (Jan. 15, 1859.)

72nd Bengal Native Infantry.—Lieut. Harry Hammon Lyster: For gallantly charging and breaking singly, a skirmishing square of the retreating rebel army from Calpee, and killing two or three sepoys in the conflict. Major-General Sir Hugh Henry Rose, G.C.B., reports that this act of bravery was witnessed by himself and by Lieut.-colonel Gall, C.B., of the 14th Light Dragoons. (May 23, 1859.)

Madras Engineers.—Lieut. Harry North Dalrymple Prendergast: For conspicuous bravery on the 21st of November, 1857, at Mundisore, in saving the life of Lieut. G. Dew, 14th Light Dragoons, at the risk of his own, by attempting to cut down a Velaitee, who covered him (Lieut. Dew) with his piece, from only a few paces to the rear; Lieut. Prendergast was wounded in this affair by the discharge of the piece, and would probably have been cut down had not the rebel been killed by Major Orr. He also distinguished himself by his gallantry in the actions at Ratgurh and Betwa, when he was severely wounded. Major General Sir Hugh Rose, in forwarding his recommendation of this officer, states: "Lieut. Prendergast, Madras Engineers, was specially mentioned by Brigadier, now Sir Charles Stuart, for the gallant act at Mundisore, when he was severely wounded; 2ndly, he was specially mentioned by me when acting voluntarily as my aide-de-camp in the action before besieging Ratgurh, on the Beena river, for gallant conduct—his horse was killed on that occasion; 3rdly, at the action of the Betwa, he again voluntarily acted as my aide-de-camp, and distinguished himself by his bravery in the charge which I made with Captain Need's troop, her Majesty's 14th Light Dragoons, against the left of the so-called Peishwa's army, under Tantia Topce. He was severely wounded on that occasion."

3rd Bombay European Regiment.—Private Frederick Whirlpool: For gallantly volunteering, on the 3rd of April, 1858, in the attack of Jhansi, to return and carry away several killed and wounded, which he did twice, under a very heavy fire from the wall; also for devoted bravery at the assault of Lohari, on the 2nd of May, 1858, in rushing to the rescue of Lieut. Doune, of the regiment, who was dangerously wounded. In this service Private Whirlpool received seventeen desperate wounds, one of which nearly severed his head from his body. The gallant example shown by this man is considered to have greatly contributed to the success of the day.

MEMORANDUM.—Ensign Everard Aloysius Lisle Phillips, of the 11th Regiment of Bengal Native Infantry, would have been recommended to her Majesty for the decoration of the Victoria Cross had he survived, for many gallant deeds which he performed during the siege of Delhi, during which he was wounded three times. At the assault of that city he captured the Water Bastion with a small party of men, and was finally killed in the streets of Delhi on September 18.

VICTORIA CROSS.—Errata in the London Gazette of Friday, May 27, 1859.—In the notifications of the acts of bravery performed by Lance Corporal Alexander Thompson, and the late Private Edward Spence, of the 42nd Regiment, for Captain Groves, commanding the 4th Punjab Rifles, read, Captain Cafe, commanding the 4th Punjab Rifles.

6TH LT. CAVALRY.—We are assured that the report which we copied into our last issue from the Commercial Gazette, affecting the loyalty of this regiment, is altogether unfounded. The 6th Lt. Cavalry are as much to be depended upon as any other Mahomedan corps.

COLONIZATION OF INDIA.

WE take great shame to ourselves in that we have so long delayed to place before our readers a summary of the Report of the Select Committee appointed to inquire into the progress and prospects of European Colonization and Settlement in India. To atone for our past dilatoriness we shall proceed without further preamble to state the conclusions arrived at by the Committee, and, as far as possible, in their own words. They begin by remarking that there are few, if any, inducements for the working classes of this country to emigrate to India, where the land is already in a great measure appropriated, the wages of labour low, the Government absolute, the climate generally unfavourable, and the usages, languages, and religions of the population strange and repulsive to the English labourer. The exclusion of free settlers under the late administration is alluded to with regret. Even now, it is said, traces of the exclusive system may be observed, if not in fact at least in feeling. There is also a doubt entertained by legal authorities "whether Europeans can enter without a licence those parts of India which have been acquired within the present century;" and it is recommended that this doubt should be removed by legislative enactment. Experience has shown that wherever Europeans have settled, a marked improvement in the country has followed. Internal navigation, means of transport, the discovery of coal and iron, a larger circulation of money, higher wages, and abatement of the ordinary rate of interest, follow in their wake. The climate, though not propitious to labour in the open air, is not nearly so injurious to the European constitution as is commonly supposed. Indigo planters and others, whose calling exposes them to the sun, for the most part enjoy excellent health, and such as attended before the committee "resembled English farmers rather than residents in a climate far distant and different from their own." The Hill districts are especially suited for European colonists, and when railways are constructed to the base of the mountains, capitalists may reside in the lower ranges, and thence superintend their various speculations in the plains. But little, however, is yet certainly known with regard to the hill climates, and it is therefore desirable that more extended observations should be conducted on the spot, by practical and scientific men. Asylums similar to those originated by the late Sir Henry Lawrence might be advantageously formed in elevated tracts, where "the children of soldiers and of other persons might be trained, with a special view to the practical improvement of India, and to the acquisition of a knowledge of the people and of the country. Mechanics and practical agriculturists (?) are greatly wanted in India," and also young men acquainted with the native languages, to act as superintendents. The report then dilates on the rapid rise of several hill stations, and dwells complacently on the manifold temptations afforded to Europeans to settle in the Neilgherries, on the table land of Mysore, or in the tea-growing countries of Assam and Cachar. The first want of a settler, however, is facility of transport, and this, it is admitted, is still one of the crying wants of India. "We are perishing," said Sir John Lawrence, "for want of roads in the plains." Next to good roads, canals of irrigation are greatly needed. "Irrigation," observed Col. Onslow, "renders production a certainty; the want of it causes wide-wasting famine." "It is," say the committee, "the key to the material prosperity of India, and with it to the social and moral improvement of the people." "Magnificent as are the works already finished or begun, they are still disproportionate to the requirements of India, and to the facilities which exist in many parts of the country for their execution." The most beneficial system is judged to be that which combines irrigating with navigable canals. Water appears to be the medium of transit best adapted to India. It is far cheaper than road or railway for bulky goods such as rice and cotton, with regard to which speed is an object of inferior importance. The improvement of the navigation of the Godavery is therefore insisted upon as the means of bringing the cotton of Berar to the sea-coast at one-twelfth of the present cost. "Great loss is now caused by the admixture with the cotton of dirt, refuse, and water, added for the purpose of increasing the weight of the cotton. Those artifices would at once be checked by European superintendence and European machinery. The settler should himself on the spot direct the labour of the native, otherwise he will be liable to mismanagement, or fraud." Tea, hemp, flax, and many kinds of cereals may be profitably cultivated to almost any extent, while the economic minerals have been found in many parts of the peninsula of excellent quality. So far the picture is pleasant enough, but this bright and cheering foreground is thrown into relief by dark and sombre shades in the background. The police is acknowledged to be corrupt and utterly useless, while the want of uniformity in law and procedure is of itself sufficient to deter Europeans from becoming settlers. "The judicial system of India," the Committee report, "will never be placed on a sound and satisfactory basis till all the Courts are organised into one harmonious whole, and until by an amalgamation of the Supreme and Sudder Courts the highest and most learned tribunals in the land shall be courts of appeal to the whole country, and serve as a pattern and example to inferior courts administering law under the same procedure." The difficulty of proving a legal title to land is stated to be one of the great defects in the present state of the law, and it is suggested that fictitious claims might be checked by calling claimants into court. A uniform law of contract is also much required. With regard to the use of the English language in the courts the committee confine themselves to repeating the evidence of various witnesses both for and against, but abstain from expressing any opinion of their own. They notice, however, the want of a judicial training among the administrators of justice, and sententiously remark that "habits of judicial thought and prompt decision are to be acquired only by legal education and forensic practice." The probity of the natives in mercantile transactions draws forth a few words of commendation, and they are likewise said to have improved in their capacity as civil judges. The resumption by the Government of lands claimed to be held in free proprietorship by the natives is pronounced, on the authority of competent witnesses, to be a violation of good faith, and the cause of great dissatisfaction; while, on the other hand, the right to acquire land in fee-simple, and the power of redeeming the land-tax in Bengal, are justly regarded as a valuable boon both to natives and to British settlers. The enlargement of the Legislative Council is contemplated from a favourable point of view, as the introduction of non-official Europeans and natives would probably supply the local knowledge in which the Council is at present so deplorably deficient. Another improvement suggested is the greater localisation of government, and the breaking down of the existing system of centralising all power in Calcutta. Finally, the Committee recommend the adoption of "a well-regulated, well-secured, and at all times convertible paper currency—in short, a Government paper."

Such is a brief but close outline of perhaps the most inane, pointless, and feeble report ever published by a Committee of the House of Commons. For such a result as this it was surely unnecessary to waste weeks and months at the most important season of the year, and to inconvenience so many individuals, whether members of the Committee or witnesses. So far as the Report goes, there is not a single point eliminated that has not been discussed again and again in these columns; nor is there a single recommendation made that has not been previously suggested by the Indian press as well as by this journal. As for any practical good likely to arise out of these costly and tedious investigations, we suspect that it will be entirely due to the newspaper comments and explanations which have been founded upon them.

JUDICIAL ADMINISTRATION OF THE NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.*

ONE of the most hopeful circumstances connected with the future welfare of the natives of India is, undoubtedly, the admission, however tardy, on the part of the Civil Service, that their much-vaunted system of administration was one vast blunder from beginning to end. Not only are they, at last, willing to acknowledge that there is something rotten in the State, but they go the entire length of avowing that the whole land groaneth in sore travail by reason of the maladministration under which it has so long languished and been distraught. We have now before us a very able and candid pamphlet from the pen of a civilian of considerable experience, who frankly indicates whatever is amiss and then offers some practical suggestions for the removal of existing grievances. If the outbreak of the mutiny was primarily due to religious fanaticism, as is stated by Sir John Lawrence, it is equally certain that its success became possible through the popular aversion to our Civil Courts and their dilatory and vexatious mode of procedure. An obvious and valid objection to the present system is that it varies according to the presidency. Bengal differs from the Upper Provinces, and these again from the Punjab and Oude. Under the native rule all civil and a large proportion of criminal causes were "settled by a committee of five chosen from the village or the neighbourhood, who held court under the village peepul tree." The plaintiff and defendant appeared in person and were confronted with one another, and the Panchayat decided according to equity, reason, and custom: and from their decision there was no appeal. Now let us consider "the procedure enforced by the regulations of Government" in criminal cases. Mr. Court supposes a man to have committed a murder in the district of Benares, and to have been apprehended by the thanahdar or police-officer, who subjects him to an examination equivalent to a preliminary trial. The accused may be detained at the police-station forty-eight hours, during which all kinds of means are resorted to to prove him guilty. If a confession be extorted, or something like prima facie evidence obtained, he is sent with the witnesses to the magistrate, who may probably be some sixty miles distant from the thanah. Here an entirely new trial takes place, every previous deposition being given afresh and any new witnesses examined. The case is now in a proper condition to go before the Sessions Judge. At the trial the same witnesses go through their evidence for the third time, and their depositions are again recorded. By this time "three complete copies of the record have been made, and one copy of the principal papers." If the judge convicts, the whole mass of papers is sent up to the Sudder Nizamut sitting at Agra, 350 miles from the spot where the crime was committed. No witnesses now appear, nor is the prisoner brought before this august Court, but the case is finally decided in a great measure by the intonation and emphasis of the native official who reads aloud the thrice-recorded depositions, in the vernacular. Then, in inferior cases of felony, such as theft, a magistrate "sees the accuser and the accused confronted, and hears the depositions of the witnesses given before them, and ultimately finds a verdict of guilty. The prisoner appeals, and the Appellate Court, who hears the record only, and that record as read by the Omlah, reverses the sentence, simply because he thinks the evidence not sufficient." As Mr. Court remarks, with indignant emphasis, "the man who hears the witnesses when giving their evidence, and who sees their manner of giving it, is by far the most competent to form a correct judgment of their credibility." No doubt of it; and a case in point is afforded by the recent case of the notorious Dr. Smethurst. All who heard the evidence agree in believing him guilty—those who only read the reports are inclined to believe him innocent. It is well that justice should be tempered with mercy, but justice perverted by sentimentalism is a very different affair. The Civil Courts are yet worse than the criminal, and Mr. Court expresses his conviction that they are greatly the cause of the co-operation afforded to the mutineers by the agricultural population. "The multitude of existing laws, constructions, and decisions is one of the main roots of the evil. By the laws a suit is protracted for years, and then sometimes ends in a nonsuit, which should be an impossibility after the point at issue has been fixed for trial." Instead of confronting the litigants, as was the custom under native rule, the first step is to require a deed of attorney from each petitioner for a suit, appointing a native pleader of the court to conduct the case—and so likewise for the defence. The appointment of a lawyer is an unmixed evil. The plaintiff exaggerates his claim to his vakeel, and the vakeel doubly exaggerates it in Court, so that a compromise becomes impossible. The delay, again, is something inconceivable. Pleadings and counter-pleadings, depositions and counter-depositions accumulate to such a degree that the needle of truth is speedily lost sight of amidst the rubbish of technicalities and falsifications. Another error is the Statute of Limitations. In Bengal a man may institute a suit at any time within twelve years—thus affording every facility to sharpers and forgers—whereas in the Punjab the extreme limit is six years, while Mr. Court is of opinion that it should not exceed three. The ex parte decision of suits is also condemned with good reason.

* "Observations on the Civil, Criminal, and Police Administration as prevalent in the Provinces of Bengal," &c., &c. By M. H. Court, B.C.S. Wm. H. Allen and Co.

"A false claim is brought, and it is an object with the plaintiff to prevent the defendant from hearing of its institution. Notice of its institution is served by the court, through the agency of peons, who receive three pence a day. The plaintiff selects a time or a day when the defendant is absent. He, the plaintiff, produces a dependant or a friend to assert that the defendant has absconded; a rupee or two is given to the peon, who returns the notice into court, with a report that the defendant has absconded in consequence of the suit being instituted." A proclamation is then issued, notifying that the cause will be adjudged within a certain time unless defended. It is written in a character probably illegible to all in the village, is posted up in some obscure part of the village where it is likely to escape observation, and if the form of the law is obeyed, it is stuck up on the defendant's gate post in his absence, to be pulled down by the plaintiff as soon as the peon's back is turned, and the appearance of a sheriff's officer to attach in execution of the decree is the first notice the defendant has of the suit being instituted."

The responsibility of land for debts and sale of land in execution of decrees of Civil Courts is a question of too much importance and intricacy to be summarily dismissed in an ordinary newspaper article. Suffice it then to say, that nothing tends so decidedly to ruin the small landed-proprietor and villager, to the exclusive benefit of the money-lender, and consequently to alienate from the British Government nine-tenths of the entire population. It still remains to point to the wretched inefficiency of the police, whether Government or Chokeedaree. The former are not only useless, but they are also dangerous and oppressive. They neither prevent nor detect crime, but they oppress the poor and innocent, and in times of commotion are almost as formidable as the mutinous sepoys. The Chokeedars are simply incompetent, and too poor to be either honest or vigilant. These are the more prominent evils alluded to by Mr. Court, and surely of themselves they almost justify the late rebellion. It is in vain to extenuate our shortcomings by the plea of ignorance or good intentions. The latter, we know, is the excuse for every folly under the sun, while the former is out of the question, because "the administration of justice by the Company's Courts in India has been the subject of animadversion for years past by all classes of the European non-official community of India," that is, by those who were really best acquainted with the habits, feelings, and sentiments of the native population.

What, then, are the remedies suggested for such a deplorable state of society? In the first place, the police must be greatly improved and placed under European sergeants of approved good character and intelligence. The district officer, next, must no more be judge as well as public prosecutor. Let the latter function alone be his, and in that capacity let him prepare each case fully and carefully for transmission to the Sessions Court. Upon this officer should devolve, moreover, the imposition and collection of taxes, excise, &c. He should be arbiter and judge in all questions concerning land, its occupation, title, &c. He should also adjudicate in all cases of breach of peace, thefts, &c.; and, finally, be superintendent of police. The Sudder Nizamut, with its expensive and useless machinery, should become a thing of the past, and give room to a Minister or Secretary of Justice, with whom it should rest to confirm or annul all capital sentences, and to hear all appeals in the last resort. But the appeals must not be encouraged as now, and of themselves they would become less frequent as the law, or rather as equity, was better administered. These and many other equally sensible remarks and suggestions will be found in Mr. Court's pamphlet, which we earnestly commend to the careful consideration of all who have at heart the happiness and well-being of our Indian fellow-subjects. He utters no feeble or uncertain note. May his warning voice not be raised in vain! We have crushed a mutiny of the soldiery, but, perchance, we may not be equally fortunate if ever the entire population be arrayed against us. Let us rather win their love by good government, by simple and equitable laws cheaply and quickly dispensed, and then it will be possible to reduce the army and bring down the expenditure to the measure of the receipts. After all, laying aside higher and holier considerations, is not discretion the better part of valour?

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

The report of the directors submitted at the half-yearly meeting on Thursday, October 26th, was issued on Monday last. It states—"The progress made in construction during the six months between the 31st of December, 1858, and the 30th of June last, on the Bengal division, is shown by a report from Mr. Turnbull, the company's chief engineer in the Lower Provinces, from which it appears that the line from the River Adjai to Cynthia, 24 miles, will have been completed within the time estimated in the last report, and that before this it will have been opened for public traffic; that there is every reason to anticipate that the expectations held out of completing the three following divisions of 33½, 23½, and 26 miles respectively, up to the Ganges at Rajmahal, by June, 1860, will be realised; that better progress is making in the next 24 miles than was last reported; that there is a fair probability of the following 26 miles being completed by July, 1860; that by the end of 1860 it is expected that the next two divisions of 23 and 20 miles respectively will be finished; that in the next 31½ miles a very large amount of work has been performed; that though the works at the Monghyr Tunnel have not progressed so rapidly as Mr. Turnbull expected, he hopes to have a road laid through by the end of 1860; that the Keul and Hullohur divisions of 7½ and 14 miles may, with unremitting attention, be completed by the end of 1861; that the Barrh and

Patna divisions, 31½ miles each, are both, but particularly the latter, in a very forward state, and may, if permanent way materials are sent up, be finished in the early part of next year; that a very large proportion of the work on the Soane division, 78½ miles, is completed, and that the whole may be finished by the end of 1860 if permanent way materials can be delivered; and, lastly, that the construction of the Soane bridge is now proceeding satisfactorily. The result generally, holding out every reasonable expectation that the whole line from Calcutta to the River Kurrumnassa, 540 miles, will, with a single break at the Soane, have been completed by the end of 1861. When it is considered that of this total distance of 540 miles, 142 miles have been for some considerable time past in profitable work, and that by the autumn of next year there is every reason to believe a further 107 miles will be brought into use, and the great traffic of the Ganges fairly tapped, the position and prospects of the undertaking cannot fail to afford satisfaction to the shareholders, and to establish the reputation of those employed by your board in the arduous duty of carrying it out. The board have no report of the progress made in construction during the last six months in the upper provinces, which is probably owing in some way to arrangements connected with the appointment of a new engineer-in-chief; but from the communications they have had with Mr. Purser since his return to this country, they have every reason to anticipate the completion of the works, with the exception, possibly of the large bridges over the Jumna, and some of the heavier station-works, simultaneously with the other portion of the line. Here, as in Bengal, much depends upon the means of transporting the permanent way materials, girders, &c., up the country from Calcutta as quickly as they are required. The shareholders are already informed of the measures taken by the board to modify, as far as possible, the difficulty experienced in this respect. They calculate that their steam flotilla, part of which is already in Calcutta, will be of immense assistance; and that when the line is opened to Rajmahal, and the river transit is relied upon only from that point, the transport of materials will proceed as rapidly as the works require it should. In the meantime every exertion is being made by Mr. Palmer, the company's agent at Calcutta, to meet the requirements of the engineers. These permanent way and works continue in efficient working order, and have been maintained during the past half-year at a cost of 6½d. per train per mile. The board have to report that the Government of India have adopted the view which they suggested as to charging capital with the cost of replacing the iron sleepers referred to in the revenue account submitted in April last, so that the gross and net receipts for the half-year ending the 31st of December, 1858, will stand as already placed before the shareholders. The account for the half-year ending the 30th of June, and the remarkable results which it exhibits, will command the attention of the shareholders and the public generally, and will justify the board's estimates of the advantages attaching to this undertaking as a sound and remunerative means of investment. The working expenses have been 42·24 per cent., or 5·61 less than the preceding half-year. The number of passengers carried during the half-year ending the 31st of December last was 591,578. The number carried during the succeeding, or last half-year was 680,354, showing an increase of 99,080 passengers as compared with the corresponding half-year, and an increase of 88,776 over the preceding half-year. The tonnage in goods and minerals, exclusive of parcels, carriages, and live stock, for the half-year ending 30th June, has been 148,166 tons, giving an increase of 48,260 tons over the preceding half-year, and 57,506 tons over the corresponding half-year. The gross traffic receipts for the half-year ending 30th June have been £119,605. 11s. 5d., showing an increase of £33,633. 3s. over the preceding half-year, or £37,031. 18s. 4d. over the corresponding half-year. The total gross receipts for the year ending 30th June, 1859, have been £205,577. 19s. 10d., against £150,232. 2s. 9d. for the year ending 30th June, 1858. The net receipts for last half-year were £66,425. 7s. 10d. against £42,978. 9s. 7d. in the previous half-year. The gross and net receipts for the year 1858 per mile per week were respectively £26. 10s. 5d. and £13s. 9s., and for the half-year ending June, 1859, £32. 7s. 11d. and £17. 19s. 10d., an increase which must be considered highly gratifying. The amount of permanent way materials included in the traffic returns of the last half-year is about nine per cent. The locomotives and other rolling stock are in excellent condition. Mr. Palmer writes from Calcutta, under date 22nd August last, that he has not received all the detailed particulars of the working expenses of the line from Allahabad to Cawnpore up to the 30th June, and that he is therefore unable to forward the accounts of that portion of the line in due form. It may be stated, however, that the line was entirely occupied by the Government from its opening to the 2nd March last, when it was handed over for public traffic. For its use by the Government the company make a claim of £60,260. 14s. 9d., which, after deducting working expenses, will leave a balance of £44,248. 8s. 4d. in their favour as net receipts for one year and five months. From the 3rd March to the 30th June the gross receipts were £24,186. 13s., and the working expenses £9,950. 11s., or 41·17 per cent., leaving a net profit of £14,227. 2s. Whilst these figures may be somewhat altered in the final adjustment of the accounts with the Government the board believe them to be in the main correct, and they afford some gratifying evidence of the company's prospects in the N.W. Provinces. The line is at present being worked under great disadvantages, but already it is paying, as nearly as can be estimated, a larger percentage than the experimental line in Bengal did in its first year, but which is now realising such good results. The surveys on the Jubbulpore line, which were stopped by the mutiny, will be recommenced during the present month. At the request of the Government of India surveys have been made of the country beyond Raneegunge with a view to continue the line to a distance of about twenty-nine miles westward, or further into the coal-fields. The results of these surveys are stated in the annexed extract from a report of Mr. Turnbull, under date 27th May, 1859, and the whole subject is now under the consideration of the Government. The largely increasing demand for coal both by the public and the railway companies will, no doubt, lead the Government to request that this additional length of line may be made. Of its advantages, if it be not a necessity, to this company in particular—first, as a means of increasing its traffic, and, secondly, of reducing, by the increased supply of coal which it will bring to market, the cost of working its entire system—there can be no question; and the board request the authority of the shareholders to undertake it, if the Government recommend it. Mr. Turnbull's estimate of the entire cost is £175,000. The company has been requested to subscribe £200 towards the cost of building a general hospital at Howrah; and, in consideration of such subscription, it is proposed that the servants of the railway company should be admitted free, accommodation being specially set apart for them. The board are prepared, with the sanction of the shareholders, to authorise this payment, and now recommend it to their favourable consideration. In their last report the board stated that they were engaged in preparing an estimate of the additional capital required to complete the line to Delhi, and to provide the necessary amount of rolling stock; and having recently received from Mr. Turnbull, in Bengal, and Mr. Le Mesurier, in the North-Western Provinces, replies to the questions, which they addressed to them as to the effect of the mutinies on prices, both of labour and materials, they are now enabled to express an opinion on the subject. The board were not prepared for the extraordinary increase in cost, either of labour or materials, which the reports show to have taken place since the mutiny; and as more than one-half of the sum to be expended in India will be influenced by this rise in prices, the effect on the total cost of the undertaking will be more serious than the board had anticipated. It is estimated that the cost of the line to Delhi will be (including an allowance of £2,300 per mile, or £2,530,000 for rolling stock) £17,000,000, of which £3,000,000 may be considered as expenditure which could not have been foreseen or provided for. The original estimate of the cost per mile submitted to the shareholders, in the directors' report of April, 1847, was (allowing £2,000 per mile only for rolling stock) £17,000 per mile for a double line of rails; or deducting £3,000 per mile for doubling, £14,000 per mile for a single line. If the work be completed for the sum now estimated, the cost per mile for a single line of rail (the main earthworks and bridges being constructed for a double line) will be, including the expenditure incident to the mutiny and other adverse circumstances, £14,480, or a sum per mile not very greatly in excess of the first calculations. Although from time to time, as the work has proceeded, the board have had every reason to believe that the cost per mile would be very much within the original estimates—as indeed, it assuredly would, but for the Santhal rebellion and the more recent mutiny—it must be remembered that their calculations of the probable profits of the undertaking were founded upon the higher figures. Every half-year's working of the opened line tends to show that the estimate of the traffic was not exaggerated; that in goods, for instance, on the 142 opened miles in Bengal, is more than in proportion to that originally estimated for the whole line, and whilst it was considered that there might be 250,000 through passengers in the year, no less than 1,172,000 travelled on the opened line last year, with every prospect of a large increase during the current one. Whilst, therefore, the unlooked-for increase in the cost must be a matter of regret, there is nothing in it which detracts from the value of the undertaking as it was originally estimated, and the traffic on the finished sections affords every assurance that when the line is opened throughout, the highest expectations formed of its prospects will be realised. The shareholders will fully appreciate the importance of the fact that, notwithstanding the delays and difficulties interposed by the Santhal rebellion and the more recent mutiny, and the great rise in prices consequent on these occurrences, and the simultaneous introduction into India of large public works, the line to Delhi, upwards of 1,100 miles in length, will be completed within or about the time at first anticipated, and at a cost only exceeding the original estimates by a percentage, already defined and sufficiently accounted for. The board have not yet decided with the Secretary of State for India upon the form in which the additional capital is to be raised, but they will lose no time in communicating to the shareholders the arrangements they may make. They feel assured of receiving their cordial support in any measures which may be necessary to complete the works within the shortest possible time, as the now large amount of comparatively unproductive capital, viewed with reference to the prospect which completion holds out, requires that the greatest despatch should be used in all their proceedings."

The accounts give the total revenue receipts on the line for the six months ending June 30 at £119,605. 11s. 5d., and the expenses £53,180. 3s. 7d., leaving a balance of £66,425. 7s. 10d.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

The half-yearly report of the directors states that during the half-year ending the 30th June last the traffic has been worked over the following sections of the opened portion of the railway, viz.:—In the Concan—Bombay via Callian to Campoolee, at foot of Bhore Ghat, 70½ miles; Callian to Wassind, 10½ miles; Mahim Branch, 1½ miles; total mileage in Concan, 88½. In the Deccan—Khandalla, at the top of Bhore Ghat Deeksal, 106½; total mileage worked over, 194½. The gross receipts from traffic, as shown in the revenue account, amounted to £87,006. 13s. 3d., and the gross expenses to £30,091. 8s. 11d., leaving available as net profit on working the sum of £48,515. 4s. 4d. This compared with the corresponding period of the previous year, when the mean of the number of miles worked was 924, gives the following result:—An increase in the mileage worked of 102½ miles; an increase in the gross receipts of £15,440. 8s. 8d.; an increase in the net profits of £23,424. 12s. 10d. The chief resident engineer reports that the permanent way and works of the line and stations have been maintained throughout the half-year in a satisfactory state of repair. Upon the portions of the railway in course of construction the works have been carried on during the half-year without interruption. In the last half-yearly report the proprietors were informed of the necessity which had occurred for putting an end to Mr. F. W. Faviell's contract for the construction of the railway upon the Bhore Ghat. The contract was actually closed on the 1st of April, and since that date the various heavy works, upon which the time of completion mainly depends, have been prosecuted with vigour and rapidity by the company's engineering staff, under the skilful superintendence of Mr. C. B. Ker, the acting chief resident engineer, by which it is hoped that all loss of time arising from the late contractor's relinquishment of the works has been obviated. The directors, acting under the advice of the late Mr. Robert Stephenson, M.P., the consulting engineer, have re-let the works to Mr. Solomon Tredwell, a contractor of established reputation, who started for Bombay on the 1st instant, in order to commence operations. The acting chief resident engineer has reported his expectation that fifty miles of contract No. 9, viz., from Deck-sal to a point where the railway is crossed by the public road between Barsee and Temboornee, will be fit to be opened for traffic by the end of the current month. The remainder of the contract from Barsee road to Sholapore it is stated will not be ready for opening before next spring. In respect of the portion of the North-Eastern line from Wassind, the present terminus, to the foot of the Thull Ghat incline, the directors are assured that favourable progress is being made with the works, the aim being to complete this section before mid-summer next, simultaneously with the first part of No. 12 contract from the summit of the Thull Ghat to Nassick. If this can be accomplished considerable advantages will result to the company in the increase of traffic, and in the securing of facilities for the transport of permanent way materials to the more distant sections of the line. Upon the Thull Ghat incline the heavy works have been commenced. The progress of some of them has not, however, been quite equal to what could have been wished, but the company's officers continue unremitting in their exertions to press the works forward. From the summit of the Thull Ghat incline to Bhosawul, considerable progress has been made, notwithstanding that the contractor's operations were in the beginning somewhat impeded by the disturbed state of the province of Khandeish, through which this part of the line runs. Upon the Nagpore branch the construction of the works has not been begun; but during the half-year Messrs. Lee, Watson, and Alton, the contractors, have been actively engaged in perfecting their arrangements for commencing operations with the opening of the present cold season. Considerable delay has been unfortunately occasioned by the general insurrection in Central India to the operations on the line from Bhosawul to Jubbulpore, both as regards the staking out of the railway by the engineers, and the commencement of the works by the contractors. The contractors will, however, be pressed to make every exertion to redeem, as far as may be possible, the time which has been lost through that cause. The paid-up capital on the 30th June amounted to £5,045,103. 16s. 6d., while there had been expended £4,420,606. 16s. 8d., leaving a balance of £624,407. 0s. 3d. The company's existing share capital being in amount £8,000,000, and the whole of that capital having been subscribed for, and upwards of one-half thereof paid up, the company are now in a position to exercise the power vested in them by section 11 of their Act of incorporation to borrow to the extent of one-third of that amount. A resolution will be accordingly submitted to the meeting to authorise the directors to borrow from time to time such sum or sums of money not exceeding in the whole the portion of their capital which the company are empowered to raise by way of loan, as may with the concurrence of the Secretary of State for India in Council be deemed expedient. The interest account with the Government stands as follows:—

Interest advanced by Government on
paid-up capital to June 30, 1859	£760,679 7 5
Net revenue of opened line to June 30,
1859, as per net revenue statement	181,698 10 11
	£578,980 16 6

The directors cannot close this report without expressing their sincere regret at the recent death of Mr. Robert Stephenson, M.P., the consulting engineer of the company, and acknowledging—with deep respect for his memory—the numerous important services he has rendered to its interests during the long period he was connected with it; he having at all times been most ready and anxious to afford the directors the full benefit of his extensive knowledge and great experience. Mr. George Berkley, C.E., who from an early period assisted Mr. Stephenson in the conduct of the company's business, has been appointed consulting engineer.

BERAR AND EASTERN COAST OF INDIA. (LIMITED.)

The company has been formed for the purpose of opening up the valley of the Godavery and the Berar, and the Hyderabad territories, by means of a railway from the port of Coringa, the only harbour on the eastern coast of India, between Madras and Calcutta, to Nagpore, and thence, by means of a branch line from the city of Hyderabad, to become connected with the Madras and Bombay Trunk Railways. The proposed railway has received the favourable notice of the Council of India, but up to the present time the usual guarantee has not been given, and the promoters of the undertaking state that the works will not be proceeded with until the guarantee has been granted. The advantages of the proposed undertaking are thus explained in the public statements of the company:—

The commercial advantages of such a communication were pointed out to the local authorities many years ago by the late Lord Metcalfe, when resident at Hyderabad, and more recently by Col. Cotton, of the Madras Engineers, in his valuable publication, "Public Works in India." In the "Appendix to Minutes of Evidence taken before select committee on the Government of Indian Territories," in 1853, at page 164 it is stated:—"If by means of railroads the great cotton fields of Berar, situated within the dominions of the Nizam of Hyderabad, were placed nearly on an equality, in point of facility of transport, with the maritime cotton districts, then a breadth of land, sufficient for the growth of a quantity equal to the full demand of Great Britain, might at once be made available. It is, however, only by means of a railway that the territory of Berar can be placed in a position to become a cotton exporting country." Cotton, the great staple of Berar, would be brought down to a port of shipment at a very reduced rate of charge. That grown in the vicinity of Chanda is considered the best in India. Wheat is another valuable product of Berar; its comparative cost in the interior and on the coast is as thirty-one to sixty six, or a difference of 113 per cent., while rice and salt, sugar, &c., which are the products of the coast, are respectively 175 and 200 per cent. dearer in the interior, owing to the expense of transit. Extensive forests of valuable timber would also become available, affording an ample supply of sleepers for the construction of the railway. Teak, of the largest dimensions, might be brought to market at a much cheaper rate than that which is now imported into Coringa from the opposite coast of Burmah. The port of Coringa, situated at the mouth of the Godavery, on the eastern side of the peninsula, and midway between Calcutta and Madras, is the only harbour on that coast. Ships of large burden have been built there, and it has every facility for loading and discharging cargo, being free from the surf, which renders the Coromandel coast generally so inaccessible. The Secretary of State in Council of India, in mentioning this company in his speech on Indian finance, observed that an objection might be taken to a railway running parallel with the River Godavery, as the Government of India had authorised a large expenditure in improving its navigation. He also, in communication with the company, intimated that £3,000,000 was too large an amount of capital to commence with, and that it was open to the company to propose a modification of the railway, involving a smaller expenditure. Keeping these points in view, the directors have proposed to meet the wishes of the Government, by commencing the line from such a point on the River Godavery as shall be proved to be navigable, and to which the stores of the railway can be conveyed with facility at all seasons of the year, and between which and the port of Coringa the traffic of the railway can be at all times conveyed by the river. From the point thus selected, lines of railway will be made to Hyderabad and Nagpore, in such manner as the Secretary of State in Council of India may determine.

CEYLON RAILWAY.

The report of the directors of this company states that, owing to rumours that the heavy cost of making the line would endanger the guarantee, they found it necessary in June last to publish a statement conclusively showing that there was no limit to the capital upon which the Government were bound to guarantee interest; intimating at the same time that, if the colony desired a virtual limitation of the capital by the construction of a shorter line, they would be prepared to submit a proposition to that effect to the shareholders, without prejudice in other respects to the existing contract. In July the directors received a communication from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, to the effect that Mr. Doyne's estimates of the cost of constructing the line from Colombo to Kandy would very greatly exceed those prepared by Captain Moorsom, the engineer sent out by the Government, and in reliance upon which the contract for the construction of the line was made with the company. Mr. Doyne had been ordered home, and might soon be expected to arrive; but as it appeared to the directors that, whether his estimates should prove to be correct or otherwise, it would be for the interest both of the colony and the company to procure the intervention of an English contractor of eminence, through whose agency the railway might be made, they had entered into arrangements with Mr. Brassey, in connection with Sir Morton Peto, Mr. Betts, and Mr. Wythes, and with Messrs. Waring, Brothers, to send agents to the colony to examine the country and its capabilities for railway construction, with a view of tendering by competition for the whole line or a part. Until, therefore, the result of the proposed examination into Mr. Doyne's estimates by an engineer on the part of the Government and the consulting engineer of the company was known, and the tenders received from the contractors, no course of action could be determined upon; but as soon as the directors were in a position to satisfy themselves of the best course to be pursued they would call a meeting of the proprietors, when the whole question would be submitted to them. In the meantime, at the express desire of the Government, operations in Ceylon had been partially suspended, and no further shipments of materials made, nor any fresh contracts entered into on this side. The capital account to the 30th June showed that £291,899 had been received in London, and £50,375 expended, leaving a balance of £241,524. The interest account showed that £12,893 had been received, and £9,060 paid to shareholders, leaving a balance of £3,232.

ALLEN'S

MAPS OF INDIA &amp; CHINA.

MAP OF INDIA; showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorates, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and Native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways and telegraphs are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the map clear and easy for reference the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP of INDIA; compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Honourable East India Company, with the railways and telegraphs. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

MAP of the ROUTES in INDIA; with Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies, and shows also the railways and telegraphs.

MAP of INDIA and CHINA, BURMAH, SIAM, the MALAY PENINSULA, and the EMPIRE of ANAM. On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 8 in. wide; 3 ft. 4 in. high. 16s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

MAP of the PUNJAB and SIKH TERRITORY. On one sheet, 5s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 6s.

MAP of CHINA, from the most Authentic Sources of Information. One large sheet—Size, 2 ft. 7 in. wide; 2 ft. 2 in. high. 8s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 11s.

MAP of the BURMAN EMPIRE, showing the Annexed District of Pegu. One sheet, 3s. 6d.; or, on cloth, in a case, 5s.

A MAP of the WESTERN PROVINCES of HINDOOSTAN, the PUNJAB, CABOOL, SINDE, BHAWULPORE, &c., including all the States between Candahar and Allahabad. On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 2 in. high. 30s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £2; rollers and varnished, £2. 10s.

MAP of ARABIA, from all the most recent Authorities, by order of the Court of Directors of the East India Company. Size, 3 ft. 3 in. high; 4 ft. 3 in. wide. On cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

HAND-BOOK to the MAPS of INDIA, giving the Latitude and Longitude of all places of note. By Major H. V. STEPHEN, late of Bengal Army Revenue Survey Department. In 18mo, bound, price 5s.

"It would be impossible to over-estimate the utility of this work to members of the military profession as a comprehensive exposition of the law especially applicable to them, and to the practice of military tribunals; and it would be difficult to speak in terms of commendation too high of the manner in which it has been executed."—Morning Chronicle

WM. H. ALLEN and Co., 7, Leadenhall-street, London, E.C.

By Order of the Secretary of State for India in Council.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That a number (to be hereafter determined) of JUNIOR APPOINTMENTS in the Engineer Establishment, and of Junior Appointments in the Upper Subordinate Establishment of the Department of Public Works in India, will next year be open to PUBLIC COMPETITION.

TEETH.

No. 9, LOWER GROSVENOR-STREET, GROSVENOR-SQUARE.

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS

PATENT.—Newly-invented and Patented application of chemically prepared WHITE and GUM-COLOURED INDIA-RUBBER in the construction of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES.

Mr. EPHRAIM MOSELY, Surgeon-Dentist, No. 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, sole Inventor and Patentee.

A new, original, and invaluable invention, consisting in the adaptation, with the most absolute perfection and success, of chemically prepared White and Gum-coloured India-rubber, as a lining to the ordinary gold or bone frame. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted in a few of their most prominent features.

All sharp edges are avoided; no springs, wires, or fastenings are required; a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable; and a fit, perfected with the most unerring accuracy is secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose, or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums.

The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the chemically prepared India-rubber, and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may with thorough comfort be imbibed and retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being, at the same time, wholly provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

To be obtained only at 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, London; 14, Gay-street, Bath; and 10, Eldon-square, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

JAMS, JELLIES, and MARMALADE,

PRESERVED IN TINS,

By BARNES, MORGAN, and Co.

To Regimental Messes they are peculiarly adapted, being more portable than jars, and not liable to breakage. B. M. and Co. would also recommend their Pickles, Sauces, Tart Fruits, &c., and their large stock of York and Cumberland Hams, Cheese, and Bacon.

THE MELTON RIDING BELT.—Impor-tant to those who are suffering from Weakness in the Back and General Debility. The following is printed by permission:—

"Sir,—You ask for my opinion of your Melton Riding Belt; I give it. Having resided for a long time in India, my con-stitution is very much debilitated, and for a long time I was suffering from a weakness in the back and the lower part of the body, which no internal remedy could reach, and the slightest exertion completely overpowered me. I was ordered by my medical man to wear a support, and seeing your ad-vertisment I obtained one of your Melton Riding Belts, which I have worn for the last five months. It gives me great support. I can take riding or other exercise without feeling that extreme fatigue and weariness afterwar s. My general health is much improved. You have my best thanks. You will secure my best support.—Yours truly,

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Bombay Mail of the 12th October once more relates to "war's alarms." The expedition against the turbulent Waghers had proved completely successful, though with some loss to the British troops. The squadron, it appears, anchored off the island of Beyt in the afternoon of the 3rd October. The following day was spent in reconnoitring; but in the morning of the 5th active operations commenced by a brisk bombardment, which was maintained until seven P.M. During the night there was a cessation of firing, but next morning it was resumed, and kept up till a practicable breach was made in the walls. At two P.M. a storming party was landed, consisting of detachments from the Royal Artillery, H.M.'s 28th Foot, Sappers and Miners, Marine Battalion, and 6th Bombay N.I. The disembarkation and advance of this small force was covered by the guns of the ships. At first the enemy offered a stout resistance, firing through loopholes with considerable effect. Nothing, however, could long resist the disciplined valour of the assailants, and that same night the fort fell into their hands. Their success, however, was not achieved without serious loss. Lieut. McCormack, H.M.'s 28th, and Ensign E. T. Willaume, 61st N.I., were killed, together with thirteen men of the 28th, and nine of the 6th. The wounded were yet more numerous; namely, Captain Glasspoole and Lieutenant Grant, H.M.'s 28th, with thirty-three men of that regiment; ten of the 6th N.I., and two of the Marine Battalion. The Sappers were at work on the 8th October in demolishing the fort and levelling it with the ground.

With regard to the rebels there is little to be said. It is reported that Jung Bahadoor is at last making some little stir to disembarass himself of his troublesome refugees, being roused to the semblance of action by the imprudent grant of the Terai that skirts the province of Oude. In Central India Feroze Shah is still roaming at large, though attended by a mere handful of desperate followers. However, a flying column is being organised under the command of Brigadier Wheeler, for the purpose of crushing the latent seeds of disaffection. Another Shahzadeh, Mahomed Shah, has been arrested and sent off to Maulmain, where a small stipend will be allowed him, barely sufficient to maintain him.

Rajah Jyellal Sing, the murderer, or accomplice in the murder, of Mrs. Green, Miss Jackson, and some twenty other British subjects, has been convicted and sentenced to death. His execution was to take place on the 1st of October, on the spot where his victims were murdered.

The Governor-general had started on his "progress" through the Upper Provinces, and will, no doubt, pass the cold season greatly to his own satisfaction.

Sir Bartle Frere has accepted a seat in the Calcutta Council, notwithstanding all rumours to the contrary, and will be succeeded as Commissioner in Scinde by Mr. J. D. Inverarity, Revenue Commissioner of the Southern Division.

A public meeting was held at Bombay on the 10th of October, attended by fully one thousand Europeans of acknowledged respectability, and presided over by W. B. Tristram, Esq., of the firm of Remington and Co., at which resolutions were unanimously passed unfavourable to the proposed income-tax.

On the previous day a meeting of 800 native gentlemen, chiefly Hindoos, was convened by Dr. Bhau Dajee; and on the 8th, of all the leading Mahomedan, Parsee, and Hindoo members of the community.

Men's names are again "syllabled" in the air. Unless we greatly err, the Secretary of State has had the happy idea of dividing his Council into the following six permanent Committees:—

FINANCIAL.

William U. Arbuthnot, Esq., Chairman.
Charles Mills, Esq.
Elliot Macnaghten, Esq.
Henry T. Prinsep, Esq.
Sir T. Erskine Perry.

PUBLIC WORKS, RAILWAYS AND TELEGRAPHS.

Col. Sir P. Cautley, K.C.B., Chairman.
Charles Mills, Esq.
Elliot Macnaghten, Esq.
Ross D. Mangles, Esq.
Colonel Henry M. Durand, C.B.

MILITARY.

Major general Sir R. J. H. Vivian, K.C.B., Chairman.

John P. Willoughby, Esq.
William J. Eastwick, Esq.
Colonel Henry M. Durand, C.B.
Rt. Hon. Sir J. L. M. Lawrence, G.C.B.

POLITICAL.

Right Hon. Sir J. L. M. Lawrence, G.C.B., Chairman.

John P. Willoughby, Esq.
William J. Eastwick, Esq.
Sir Frederick Currie, Bart.
Major general Sir R. J. H. Vivian, K.C.B.

REVENUE, JUDICIAL AND LEGISLATIVE.

Ross D. Mangles, Esq., Chairman.
Henry T. Prinsep, Esq.
Sir Henry C. Montgomery, Bart.
Sir James W. Hogg, Bart.
Sir T. Erskine Perry.

Sir Charles has also appointed other committees to consider several important subjects now before him. The mode of conducting the business of his office is likewise to be altered. During the last year the smallest matter has had to originate in committee, and then to pass through some half-dozen hands, and not always the most experienced. The natural consequence has been a system of procrastination, vexatious to the public and injurious to the character of the office. Under the proposed system, all matters of importance will have, in the first place, to be submitted by the chief of a department to the Secretary of State in personal communication, thereby giving the head of the department an opportunity of explaining his own views; while minor questions are to be disposed of by the proper department without any reference to the Secretary of State or his Council.

RECENT COURTS MARTIAL.

Six Courts Martial recently assembled at Morar, Gwalior, for the trial of privates belonging to the 3rd Bengal European regiment, chiefly for insubordinate and mutinous conduct. The men seem to show a degree of independence and hauteur in their bearing and conduct towards their superiors which must tend to subvert discipline in the regiment. Unfortunately, Lord Clyde seems to be rather leniently disposed towards these refractory soldiers, and in the majority of cases the sentence passed by the Court has not been confirmed, the punishment appearing to the Commander-in-Chief to be much more severe than the offence demands.

It is to be hoped that the late events, so deeply affecting the interests of the army, will not be without their influence on the future welfare of the soldier. Much remains to be done in carrying out genuine army reform and hygiene. The Crimean war, with its glory and its havoc, laid bare and made intolerable many abuses and wants. The late military disturbances will, we trust, produce a similar result.

In two instances the Court sentenced the prisoners to suffer corporal punishment and imprisonment besides; but the former has not been approved of by the Commander-in-Chief, and, of course, has not been carried out. Without in any way underrating the importance of securing order and discipline, the punishment of fifty lashes, with imprisonment for seven years, in the case of John Lallas, charged with having made use of insolent language towards a lance sergeant, his superior officer, by saying, "It is better for you to be off; you have no business here;" and with having escaped from confinement before he was set at liberty by proper authority, appears to be unduly severe. It is curious that, in their first sentence, the Court sentenced the prisoner to penal servitude for four years. But the Commander-in-Chief, not concurring with the Court, asked them to reconsider their decision, evidently thinking that they would reduce the original sentence. And what did they do? They increased the punishment by the addition of fifty lashes and three years' further imprisonment. The Commander-in-Chief has some sensible remarks on the revised sentence of the Court:—"The original sentence was illegal—the punishment of penal servitude not being awardable under either of the charges—and consequently the Court was directed to reconsider its award; and it was informed that this being an exceptional case, the restrictions usually in force as to the duration of the punishment might be considered relaxed. But the Commander-in-Chief never anticipated that the Court would think of awarding imprisonment for the lengthened term of seven years, which in India may be held to be nearly equivalent to a sentence of death." The revised sentence was reduced to imprisonment for one year, and the remainder of it remitted. The other case, in which corporal punishment of fifty lashes on the bare back was awarded, is that of private John Condon, who was charged with disobeying the lawful command of a sergeant, his superior officer, "by wilfully neglecting to answer his name when it was called out." The sentence was not confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief, who, in consideration of the previous good character of the prisoner, reduced the term of the imprisonment to four months, and remitted the corporal punishment.

Of late years there has been a change for the better in the system of punishment for military offences. At home corporal punishments have become so rare that it is said in the Foot Guards only one instance has occurred in every 1,000 men annually. The establishment of military prisons, to which offenders may be sent from all parts of the country, has partly led to this result. Not only has there been this great reduction in the frequency, but a corresponding alteration has taken place in the severity also. Even so late as 1832 the number of lashes which might be awarded by a General Court Martial was unlimited, and, in 1825, it is on record that one man was sentenced to 1,900, of which he received 1,200. From 1832 to 1837 the maximum number of lashes inflicted by the sentence of such Courts became gradually reduced to 200. After 1836 no higher number could be inflicted; while a District Court Martial was limited to 150 and a Regimental one to 100. Since 1847 the maximum of this description of punishment has been limited to 50 lashes. All this has occurred, we believe, without any relaxation of discipline in the army.

It has often been said that flogging is a necessary evil. Bruce, in his Institutions of Military Law, 1717, gives what we doubt not was a true account of the composition of European armies in his day:—"If all infamous persons, and such as have committed capital crimes, heretics, atheists, (!) and all dastardly and effeminate men, were weeded out of the army, it would soon be reduced to a pretty moderate number, the greater part of the soldiery being men of so ignoble, disingenuous tempers, that they cannot be made obedient to the allurement of rewards; nay, coercion being, generally speaking, the surest principle of all vulgar obedience. There is, therefore," he grimly adds, "another part of military institutions fitted to such men's capacities, and these are the various punishments awarded to their crimes, which, as gods, may drive these brutish creatures, who will not be attracted."

We are now trying a more humane principle, and hope that it will be found more effectual in ameliorating the condition of European soldiers than the barbarous practice of flogging.—Bombay Gazette.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "QUEEN OF INDIA."—We regret to learn that great fears are entertained for the safety of the ship Queen of India, Captain Alexander, of 658 tons, bound from Calcutta to Melbourne, which vessel left Saugor on the 25th July last, Mr. Bensley, who piloted her to sea, not having been heard of up to the present date. The Queen of India got out in the very midst of the hurricane which visited Calcutta and its neighbourhood in the night of the 26th and morning of the 27th of July. On Monday last a rumour reached town to the effect that a vessel was seen on one of the reefs, with only her mast visible above water.

CANPORE, Sept. 6.—Alexander's Horse is ordered to Saugor, and leaves on the 10th. A fleet of boats for the conveyance of a native regiment has been got ready. The destination is supposed to be down in Bengal somewhere, but neither this nor the regiment going is given out. The detachment of discharged men from the upper provinces are arriving and going off at once to Allahabad rapidly. Nothing can be better than the arrangements for their progression. A little crowding took place at Allahabad on one occasion, but the men were dying so of cholera there that a change to river air, even with a little crowding, was better than leaving the men as they were. The men of the 2nd Cavalry as they passed through lost a terrible number of men. The river is now rapidly falling, and the rains have ceased, though clouds still hang about. Cholera in the station is on the decrease, but we may expect an unhealthy month.

MILITARY ITEMS.—The 23rd company Royal Engineers arrived at Allahabad on the 16th Sept. from Cawnpore, and proceeded by the steamer Colgong, en route to China. The battalion 60th Rifles now at Benares will relieve H.M.'s 99th regiment at Berhampore and Calcutta; part leave Benares in steamers Colgong and Lucknow, the remainder going via Raneegunj by bullock train.

The discharged troops from Saugor are on their march for Mirzapore, at which place they will arrive early in October. Some 540 discharged troops from Gwalior await transport to Calcutta and are now encamped near Cawnpore. No 8 battery 11th brigade Royal Artillery will leave Dum Dum shortly for China. Troops are being concentrated on and towards Saugor; and a flying column will scour the jungles between Oude and Nepal.

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCILS.—Notwithstanding the recent appointments of Sir Bartle Frere and Mr. Wilson, it is stated in official circles, apparently upon good authority, that the Executive Councils are doomed, and will probably be abolished in the course of next year. Sir B. Frere, it is said, will be provided for in the Government of Bombay. Mr. Ricketts, it is believed, will be compelled by the state of his health to retire. Sir James Outram will probably receive the Commander-in-Chiefship of one of the minor presidencies if he wishes to remain in India, and Mr. Wilson, it is supposed, does not intend to stay over next year. The secretaries are to be made Secretaries of State; but as they must act in subordination to the Governor-general, they cannot form an independent Ministry, and the arrangement under an idle or incapable Governor-general is likely, we suspect, to prove a failure.

THE NORTH-WESTERN BANK OF INDIA.—The shareholders of the North-Western Bank of India who voted by proxy, and formed the majority, have gained a victory. The judgment of the Supreme Court will gratify them. Indeed, all parties but the late directors have great cause to be satisfied. The proxy shareholders, having gained what they wanted, ousted the directors. Mr. Fergusson is nearer his Rs. 20,000 than before, and the lawyers have a glorious case before them. The cash of the bank is safely funded in a first-rate equity suit, or nest of suits, and we look forward to the day when a leading council at the bar will open the case, amidst shouts of laughter, as in the famous plea of Jarndyce v. Jarndyce, "My lud, there are no more funds in the case of the North-West Bank, which has just been called."

THE BEGUM OF OUDE.—From an Oordoo volume which is now passing through a native press we give the following translated extract relative to Huzrut Mehal, the rebel Begum of Oude:—Her original name was Ameermum; her father's name was Islam Koolee, and that of her mother Joornia. They were slaves in the house of one Tajummul Hoossein Khan. She had also a brother, who was blind, and who lived by begging in the streets. Her parents died when she was about fourteen years old. Her master, about the same time, was stricken with poverty, and as it was the practice in those days for those who had pretty girls to dispose of them, he resorted to; one Awuz Allee, "the Burdha Ferosh" (slave-dealer), and offered the youthful Ameermum for the market. Awuz Allee had heard of the beauty of the girl, so promised to do his best with her for Tajummul Hoossein Khan. Next day, or the day after, Awuz Allee repaired to the palace, and sought an interview with Chota Khan, "Dharee," (Fidler) alias Aneesooddowlah Bahadur—the title conferred on him by the King, Wajeed Allee Shah. The business was at once settled. The girl was ordered to be brought immediately to the harem. The Burdha Ferosh returned delighted to Tajummul Hoossein Khan, whose joy was unbounded when he was assured that he was to receive Rupees 500 for his beautiful slave, the purchaser being no other than the highest personage in the land. The unconscious Ameermum was accordingly put through a rigid course of cleansing; clean clothes were put on her, her hands and feet were dyed with myrtle, her hair was platted into a large "Chotee," intertwined with green and red cloth, as is the custom among the women of the higher classes in Oude, and besprinkled with scents, she was conveyed to the palace in a doolee. Suffice it to say, that Wajeed Allee Shah, who was never particular to a fault, approved of his bargain, allotted her apartments in the harem, and placed her under the tuition of Aneesoddowlah, and Moosahiboodowlah, respectively, music and dancing masters. She was not long in finishing her education; in singing, especially, she soon excelled. Her royal master took a desperate liking to her, ennobled her by the title of Huzrut Mehal, married her according to the ceremonial rites of the "Mootah," fixed on her a monthly allowance of a thousand rupees, enrolled her on the list of the royal household, and removed her into the beautiful building in the Kaisur Bhang, known as the Isk Munzil, or "House of Love." She now acquired the soubriquet of the "dark fairy," from her short and slender figure, dark complexion, and remarkably sylph-like habits. This was just twelve years ago. Huzrut Mehal chose her own attendants, and amongst others appointed the famous Mummo Khan, a Darogah, or superintendent of her establishment. At that time he was only a common Nujeeb, one of the guards stationed at the gate of her mahal. In due course the Begum had issue, the present Birjeesh Kuddur. After this very little was known or said about her; and evidently the king's attachment for her had died away, seeing that amongst so many other begums whom he had taken away with him to Calcutta, and had from time to time sent for from this, he never once thought of his once favourite Huzrut Mehal. Finding herself neglected by her royal husband, and her son almost totally unrecognised by the British authorities, we can hardly wonder that, when an opportunity offered for manifesting her well-founded discontent, she was not slow in taking advantage of it; and we all know that woman's hate is on a par with woman's love. However indecorous, the above is a strictly correct history of the antecedents of the rebel queen. —Oude Gazette.

FORTHCOMING CAMPAIGN IN OUDE.—The frontier of Oude will shortly present one of those busy scenes to be found only in the neighbourhood of an Indian camp. We believe the Governor-general intends that a properly appointed force shall penetrate the Terai, scour it from end to end, and sweep up all the rebels now secreted in the belts of forest along the border. The Chief Commissioner with his staff will proceed to the rendezvous and communicate these instructions to officers commanding brigades to be so employed. The Nana will be the chief object of this general pursuit, and no measures in any way calculated to secure him will be omitted from the programme. Jung Bahadur will, as a matter of course, be required to join in the chase or to secure the various tracks that lie on the way to Katmandhoo, although we believe the Nana if pursued will avoid that route and prefer the less frequented road leading to the borders of the great plateau of Gobi. From this the route to the great lake of Mansorawar is of easy approach, and will afford him shelter behind one of its lesser parallel ridges. We believe his chief plan is to follow a mountain stream or rivulet, and to encamp in such positions as leave the boldest development of the chain or ridge at some distance. A corps organised after the manner of the Punjab guides might be raised in the hills, and employed to obtain information for our troops from all points. Each party of rebels being carefully tracked and pursued, we should make short work of the whole in a few weeks. —Lucknow Herald.

SIKHS FOR CHINA.—We are glad to learn that Goolab Singh, brother of the Ataree rajah, has just returned to Lucknow from his new Jaghire of Shunkerpore, in the district of Bareilly. This brave fellow is so well pleased with the consideration shown to him by Lord Canning, that he expresses his readiness to proceed to China in command of a regiment of Sikhs, if allowed to take part with the avenging army now on the way to punish our treacherous foes. We are perfectly satisfied 10,000 Sikhs would readily volunteer for this service if the son of one of their oldest sirdars was so honoured. It is, perhaps, not generally known that the father of Goolab Singh sacrificed his all to screen some Sikh soldiers from punishment, which, according to our laws, he considered they deserved, but according to their time-honoured customs he could not permit them to suffer. These soldiers had by some accident killed a French officer in the service, and this fact was concealed by the old sirdar, and ultimately led to that final issue on the battle field when the Khalsa army was almost annihilated. It was in these terrible struggles that the high caste native soldiers of our own army fought so bravely and showed so many instances of devotion to their officers, and it was the recollection of these acts of devotion that made those officers unwilling to suppose such men capable of treachery. The Grenadiers of one regiment deliberately sprang forward and received the sword cuts aimed at their officers, thus sacrificing themselves with a devotion which would have done honour to the soldiers of any army. —Lucknow Herald.

CAPTAIN LANE.—We (Commercial Gazette) regret to announce the death of Captain Lane, formerly of the Madras steamer, and lately appointed agent of the Commercial Transport Association here. It appears he went down as a passenger in the Lucknow steamer to Benares, and while off or near Ghazee-pore he went to sleep on board the flat; it seems during the night, about ten o'clock, he got up, and half awake must have either walked overboard or lost his balance and fell between the two vessels. A boat was immediately sent to pick him up, but without success.

MR. W. BRUNTON.—The Delhi Gazette is informed that "Mr. W. Brunton, the chief engineer of the Punjab railway, has received a letter of thanks from the local Government for his energetic superintendence of the works under his charge. Mr. Brunton has lately submitted to the consulting engineer, Punjab (Colonel Greathed), through the agent of the Company, Mr. Raeburn, a definite indent for the entire cost of the railway between Lahore and Amritsur, as it is being actually constructed, accompanied by a plan and section of the whole line, and by schedules of the quantities of work executed and to be executed in each mile. In submitting these schedules to the local Government, the consulting engineer states 'that to Mr. Brunton belongs the distinction of being the first chief engineer who has submitted precise working estimates for a railway in the Bengal Presidency, and that within six months from the date of turning the first sod on the line. The East Indian railway in the North-West Provinces was commenced in 1855, but up to date estimates have not been furnished for a single section of the line.'"

THE OUDE REBELS.—From the Begum's camp we (Lucknow Herald) learn that supplies pour in from all quarters. The Nepaulese, it is supposed, under orders from Khatmondhoo, furnish everything in the greatest profusion, and are well rewarded. The Nana is still on the north bank of the raptee, where its course from the hills flows westward. His followers, who have no money or supplies, plunder the inhabitants of the Deokur valley. Mummo Khan remains in the Dang valley, and refuses to return to the Begum's camp, although his enemies have been pacified, and the sepoys have promised not to molest him. The Oude Gazette learns from an authentic source that Jung Bahadur has ordered the Nana, Mummo Khan, Beni Madho, and the rest of the principal rebels, to quit the Nepaul territories, under pain of being forcibly ejected by his troops. This, as our readers will easily understand, will be service equivalent to the value of the tract of country which it is in the contemplation of Government to make over to Nepaul. There is a report, not, however, confirmed yet, that Mummo Khan is dead. Nothing is said about the Begum.

PRAYER AND PROPHECY.—A report from the North-West states that when Feroze Shah, one of the sons of the ex-King of Delhi, joined Tantia Toppe, a faleer gave him a cap and a staff, and told him that he should be King of all India. Numbers of Mussulmans joined him. He has since lost the insignia of royalty, and has fled to the jungle alone, where he is praying for the fulfilment of the prophesy.

CENTRAL INDIA.—The Englishman is informed that "Shahzadah Mahomed Shah, one of the sons of the ex-King of Delhi, and Yacoob Mahomed Khan, have been arrested in Central India, and sent to Moulmain, where they are to live under surveillance, the Shahzadeh to be allowed one hundred and six rupees a month." We have received from a correspondent a sketch of a monument which it is proposed to raise in Central India to the memory of those who have fallen in the late campaign—either from the effects of the climate or in battle. We are glad to learn that a start has been made to secure funds for this object, and that 1,300 rupees have been already subscribed. The monument is to be erected in front of the restored church at Banda, and if there should be any surplus fund, a tablet is also to be placed in the Cathedral at Madras.

THE EUROPEAN SOLDIERS.—The inhabitants of Chinsurah have memorialised his Honor the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal on the lawlessness and misconduct of the European soldiers now located at that place. Instances of some of these men breaking into the residences of native gentlemen, and of the violation of native women, have, we are told, been recorded in detail in the memorial for his Honor's information. The life, property, and honour of the inhabitants are stated to have become most insecure during the last few days, native shops are being plundered, and many of these have therefore been closed. Many of the inhabitants, too, contemplate forsaking their homes, unless the shelter and protection they have a right to expect from the depredation and riotousness complained of is afforded them by the Government. The soldiers against whom these complaints are made are the dismissed men of the late Company's regiments recently arrived from the North-Western Provinces.

THE FEROPZEPOR REGIMENT.—The Commander-in-Chief is pleased to announce that his Excellency the Governor general in Council sanctions the adoption of a Sikh turban, of yellow and red, as the head-dress of the Ferozepore regiment, in lieu of the Kilmarnock cap formerly worn.

CONTEMPLATED REDUCTION.—We hear that Government has issued circulars and called for statements from some of the public departments, asking for information as to how far it is practicable now to reduce the establishments augmented in consequence of the late mutinies. His Excellency the Governor general is of opinion that in all public establishments, the expenses of which have exceeded cent. per cent. what they were before the mutinies, reductions should speedily be made.

FUTTEGHUR, Sept. 14.—Preparations were made by the European troops at this station to do honour to the anniversary of the fall of Delhi, but the tamasha did not pass off without a sad accident. There was a display of fireworks, rockets, blue-lights, and a mock magazine to be blown up, in commemoration of the gallant and lamented Willoughby's feat. All went off well till towards the close of the display, when a spark fell into a box containing gunpowder, and caused a serious explosion. A European drum-major was shutting the box when it exploded. The man was most severely injured, his hands, face, and legs being much burned. He was conveyed to hospital, and has luckily escaped without loss of sight. Two other European soldiers who were standing near the box when it exploded were similarly injured. No lives were lost, and the injured men are all likely to recover.

ROORKEE.—A correspondent of the Delhi Gazette writes as follows:—"On my arrival at Roorkee I expected to find at least some improvement in the work-shop; there was that interminable rumbling of the two engines, so grating to delicate nerves, with little or no work in progress. The College was nominally open, the students having left, and the heads were rusticiating after the late glorious examination. The greatest treat one can enjoy is a bathe in the canal, at the terminus of the aqueduct, at sun set. During the sultry weather you may meet the amiable director, the jolly commandant, the affable joint magistrate, the principal, the professor, the artist, the printer, with a host of clerks, engineers, &c., from the rails, struggling with the rapid stream to cross in line; others, less adepts in the athletic art of swimming, glide from the stern of the idle steamer, while the rest, apparently afraid to venture into the deep, prefer remaining on terra firma. The evening I was last there I was lost in admiration of the scenery from this point of the canal. We had had heavy rain, the atmosphere was clear, and although the sun had set we could see the towering Himalayas still basking in his rays; the gentle but rapid stream of the great Ganges canal crossing the Solani river, whose roaring tide shakes the aqueduct, and seemingly mocks our engineering skill, with jaws open ready to engulf all at some future date, contrasts with the beautiful undulating country to the north, fringed with the inviting-looking Sawaliks. This small station of Roorkee is a thriving place. Society limited, a deficiency of the fair sex and consequent want of harmony; there are several capital houses (got up cheap), roads very good, but strange to say, not a single garden worthy the name. An enterprising native has taken the lead of all the carriage dak agents, in having garry daks direct from Roorkee to Meerut, Delhi, &c.

AGRA, Sept. 29.—It is said that a sum of Rs. 50,000 has been levied upon the city of Agra, on account of plunder taken during the disturbances! Shades of Mahmoud and of Nadir Shah! If departed spirits are affected with the sense of the ridiculous, how these gentlemen will roar with laughter in their graves. Fifty-six thousand rupees levied upon one of the richest cities in India for the plunder of one of the richest and largest cantonments, an immense civil station, a seat of Government, and a very large non-official European community, an immense number of whom were massacred in cold blood! Fifty-six thousand rupees! and who shall reckon up the value of the plunder—the city and village people had it all—there was not a Pandey near the place. The Pandies had all gone off in one direction, and the British troops—in another; the peaceful citizens and villagers finding bungalows empty, full of rich furniture, to them each house containing wealth that might have satisfied a Cræsus, helped themselves. When we heard that fifty-six thousand rupees were to be levied, we of course thought it must be a mistake for five lacs and sixty thousand, but it appears not. It might as well have been fifty-six thousand annas, or fifty-six thousand nothings. Can any one understand the end or object it is proposed to gain by this cess? Is it to compensate for loss of property at the rate of one anna for every hundred rupees or perhaps one anna and six pie?—it cannot be intended as a punishment or a mark of displeasure on the part of Government—it must be a judicial freak, a lusus Justicie, a practical joke, and as such it is not so bad, for certain it is that it will set everybody in Agra, natives and Europeans, laughing. We almost wonder that while they were about it they did not raise the amount to fifty-six thousand rupees, fifteen annas, and nine pie. The nine pie might have gone some way towards making up for the plunder of the furniture in Government house.—Delhi Gazette.

IRON BARRACKS.—The Phoenix hears that for the future all barracks required in India will be constructed of iron. As these iron buildings will admit of being taken to pieces, they will be well adapted for temporary encampments, and may be packed up and carried on camels when a regiment is marching. Our contemporary remarks:—"Many circumstances concur to create a preference for such structures. Their aggregate cost will be less than of structures of brick, stones, or other materials. They will be safe from fire, thus rendering their destruction by incendiaries in troublesome times an impossibility. Should, as unfortunately too often occurs, a mistake be made in the selection of a site for a new military station, and that chosen turn out unhealthy, or otherwise objectionable, all the money expended will not have been thrown away, for the iron building can be taken to pieces, and removed to a more desirable place. This facility of removal should, of itself alone, cause iron barracks to be preferred to those of masonry. In India it will from time to time happen, that stations of vast military importance at one period have, in the course of six, eight, or ten years, ceased to be of any military importance at all. In such cases the money expended will have been in a great measure sacrificed unless the buildings are removable, and this cannot be unless they are of iron. Such structures will also equalise rates throughout the country, preventing a building at Allahabad from costing Government six times as much as a building of the same dimensions in the neighbourhood of Calcutta. The cost of material and of carriage can be calculated to a pie, and the expense of erection must be much the same in most parts of India, but if even greater in some places than others, it can in no case be other than a comparatively small item in the aggregate cost of the building."

UNCOVENANTED SERVICE FUND.—Some few of the subscribers to the Uncovenanted Service Family Pensioned Fund, dissatisfied with the present condition of the institution, have circulated a memo. pointing out what they consider defects and errors in the management. They have called upon the secretary to circulate certain propositions for the retrenchment and curtailment of the expenditure of the fund, and to obtain the votes of the general body of the subscribers thereon.

TROOPS FOR CHINA.—Her Majesty's 78th foot embarked on board the steamers Indomitable and Australian at Calcutta, on the 28th of September, for service in China. Shipping is engaged for two other regiments, the 3rd Buffs, and probably either the 1st battalion of the 60th Rifles or the 93th. We understand that a regiment is also to be dispatched from Bombay, and another from Madras.

THE EX-RAJAH OF MUTHOWLIE, who was recently tried before Mr. Campbell, charged with being a leader of revolt, and with having betrayed into the hands of the rebel government of Oude certain Europeans, who were afterwards barbarously murdered, has been sentenced to pass the remainder of his days in penal servitude, and has arrived in Calcutta preparatory to being sent to the Andaman Islands. The ex-rajah, it is said, appealed against this decision to the Governor-general, who refused to review the judgment, and the sentence accordingly stands confirmed.

DISBANDING IRREGULAR HORSE.—A correspondent from Simla tells us that orders have been issued by the Commander-in-Chief for the following corps of Towannah Horse to be brought to Lahore, and disbanded:—Souter's Towannah Horse; Orchard's Towannah Horse; Vivian's Pathan Horse; Smith's Pathan Horse; Stokes's Pathan Horse.

JEYPORE, Sept. 23.—All is quiet here, although so many reports were spread about disarming and expected resistance on the part of the population. The political agent has succeeded in capturing some parties concerned in the robbery of the dak from Delhi, and it is hoped will have them severely punished. I understand the leader of this gang is still at large, and that every exertion will be made to secure him also. Our loyal little Moulvie deserves great praise for his exertions in this business, and I am assured he is confident that he will succeed in his efforts to bring the remaining offenders to justice. Our political agent is just now fully employed in settling cases, and has in many instances done justice to parties who have long sought redress. The rains have entirely broken up, and we have very fine weather.

CAPTAIN R. MACLAGAN, so long the able and most successful Principal of the Thomason College at Roorkee, has been appointed Director of Public Instruction in the Punjab. A better officer to fill the post could not have been found.

GURUWAL.—The estate of the Rajah of Gurliwal, which had lapsed to Government in consequence of the Rajah dying without legitimate issue, has nevertheless been made over to the eldest illegitimate son.

SEETAPORE.—A college for the education of native youth has been established at Seetapore by Major Barrow, Commissioner of the Khyrabad division. We have not received particulars of the scheme, but we hope the arrangements tend to make this institution to some extent self-supporting. The encouragement and support given by the Commissioner will doubtless ensure for it a large share of success. We understand Government have been pleased to increase the reward for the destruction of wolves to Rupees 6, and that the plan of a wolf trap has been circulated by our Commissioner.

MAHOMED HOSSEIN, the rebel Nizam of Goruckpore, and his nephew, have been ordered to quit Lucknow at once, and proceed to Muzzufur, nuggur.

SAUGOR, Sept. 21.—The relief of the Madras troops at Saugor seems now quite certain, as various Punjab regiments and levies are coming down this way. The Bombay troops at Seronj and Jhansi are likewise to be relieved, it would appear. It is given out that there is to be a petty campaign against the rebels in Bundelcund this cold season, conducted by Brigadier Wheeler. These rebels are very paltry but troublesome, and have now been joined by Feroze Shah, and about 400 mutineers who crossed the Dussan after having been attacked by Colonel Nott. Bundelcund being almost all jungle, and the principal resorts of the rebels being hill as well as jungle, it may be a difficult matter to punish these traitors, but I am glad to see that it is to be attempted.

THOMASON COLLEGE.—The annual examination of students at Thomason College, Roorkee, was held as usual at the end of September. Captain A. D. Turnbull, who kindly undertook to preside at the distribution of the prizes, especially complimented Mr. J. B. Sparkes, to whom the gold medal was awarded, and Mr. W. Armstrong, whose name appears at the head of this year, upon the high distinctions which they had obtained. In the course of his speech he drew attention to the fact that these gentlemen (with others also creditably mentioned) were educated at the Mussoorie school.

CIVIL SERVICE ITEMS.—The following changes are shortly to occur:—Mr. R. Alexander, Commissioner of Rohilcund, on leave to England, retires on the annuity on the 1st November. Messrs. Sherer and Mayne, magistrates of Cawnpore and Bandah, go on furlough. Mr. Batten, now officiating commissioner of Rohilcund, will, no doubt, succeed Mr. Alexander, and be succeeded in return as judge of Cawnpore, by Mr. F. B. Pearson, magistrate of Goruckpore, but officiating judge of Cawnpore. There will, then, be three disposable districts, Goruckpore, Cawnpore, and Bandah, rather good news for the number of first class joint magistrates waiting open-mouthed to be made pucca. Our magistrate, Mr. J. S. Campbell, has left for Shahjehanpore, to officiate as magistrate and collector for Mr. Paterson, on leave to Europe. This officer is not expected to return. Mr. F. C. Forbes, our present officiating magistrate, has been appointed to the department of accounts, and leaves for Madras shortly. Mr. M. H. Court, the permanent magistrate and collector of Allahabad, is expected to join his appointment by the 1st December.—Commercial Gazette.

BHURTPORE, 12th Sept.—Our political agent has gone for a change to Jeypoor, and before leaving gave particular instructions to have the young rajah trained in horsemanship. The royal youth is accordingly paraded every evening on one of the best blood from the Deccan, much to the edification of himself and the inhabitants. There is a great stir here of preparation for the marriage ceremony which will shortly take place between the young rajah and the daughter of his Highness of Puttialah. The usual procession will leave this after the Dussarah, and proceed to Puttialah to receive and escort the bride to her lord of Bhurtpore. The city is perhaps one of the most wealthy in this part of India, being the centre of resort for the jats of Rajpootanah.

"FUMUS TROES."—Of the old Bengal native army the following corps have ceased to exist:—4 troops horse artillery; 3 battalions foot artillery; 10 regiments light cavalry; 59 regiments infantry; the Ramghur and Hurreannah Light Infantry Battalions; 7 regiments irregular cavalry; and the Oude Irregular Force (3 horse field batteries, 3 regiments irregular cavalry, and 10 regiments irregular infantry).

A REVENUE SURVEY for Oude will be established during the present cold season; Captain Bradford will be placed in charge.

THE VIZAGAPATAM INQUIRY.

Mr. Reade, agent to the Governor of Madras, has been accused of pecuniary dealings with the Rajah of Vizianagram, and of falsehood in endeavouring to conceal them. A commission has inquired into the charges, and the evidence on both sides has been published at length. The affair, of some interest in itself, becomes important from its bearing on the position of all political officers of Government.

The facts of the case briefly stated appear to be these. Mr. Reade, a civilian of twenty-two years' standing, was in 1857 appointed agent in Vizagapatam. On his arrival he found, or fancied he found, proof of a strong disposition at the palace to side with the mutineers. He incurred the bitter hatred of the native officials by some acts of authority, and seems to have laid the foundation of a strong dislike on the part of the Rajah. The Rajah, however, was of course, to all appearance, most friendly, and Mr. Reade allowed himself to be betrayed into a somewhat undignified intimacy with the native noble. About the end of 1857 Mr. Reade either borrowed or bought two horses and two elephants from the Rajah, needed to accomplish a sudden journey on duty, when his own had fallen sick. In March, 1858, he also borrowed or bought two mirrors, to fit up his drawing-room for the reception of Lord Harris. The Rajah declares that he only lent the horses and mirrors. On his side is his own peremptory statement, and partial proof of the fact that he paid for the horses' keep. On the other side is the equally peremptory statement of Mr. Reade, and the oath of the Rev. Mr. Griffiths and an officer, who depose to having repeatedly heard Mr. Reade mention the purchase. As to the keep, Mr. Reade's butler was paid to provide it, and most probably did also receive it from the Rajah. A khonsamah, in Bengal at all events, would by instinct attempt that particular trick. Further, on the Rajah's side is the fact that the horses and articles were not paid for till June, 1859, and then in antedated cheques. Mr. Reade explains the non-payment by declaring that the Rajah always declined fixing a price, putting him off from month to month with polite deprecatory sentences, and the antedating, by the fact that his cheque books were his only accounts, and he invariably dated a cheque on the day a transaction had taken place. Moreover, evidence as to the antedating of the cheques was delivered in to the commission by himself, only voluntarily, and was therefore inconsistent with the notion of concealment. In July, Government beginning to stir in the matter, Mr. Reade called on the Rajah, and asked him, according to his own statement, to settle the accounts so long suspended. The Rajah agreed to do so, and also promised to answer a letter inquiring if Mr. Reade had ever borrowed property from him. He did so, sending the following letter:—

"My dear Mr. Reade,—Your kind letter has surprised me certainly. In reply, I can only say that you have no property of mine on loan, but I cannot help telling you that of all the agents and English gentlemen I have known, you have been the most particular I ever met, and when you first came to the district you spoke to me on the very subject. I certainly am curious to know why you have written to me about such a matter. Please let me know. Ever your sincere friend,

(Signed) "H. H. Rajah of Vizianagram."

The Rajah alleges that he wrote under persuasion—the idea of compulsion is formally disclaimed—and that he refused ten or twelve times to write. On the following day he forwarded a letter to the private secretary, informing him that the previous one had been extracted from him, and did not contain the truth. On the appearance of the Commission he of course adhered to his charges, and gave his evidence, the prosecutor says, with every appearance of truthfulness.

This is the sum and substance, so far as we can perceive, of the whole matter; for the charges of falsehood, of course, depend upon the truth of Mr. Reade's account of his pecuniary relations with the Rajah. If his account is accepted, the accusation of falsehood in his letters to the Governor disappears. The only serious question is whether he borrowed or bought those horses and other articles. There was a strong effort, en passant, to prove the price paid beneath their value, but it broke down, Mr. Knox, C.S., having himself previously sold one of the horses to a European at a lower price than Mr. Reade paid.

It is plain that in a case of evidence so absolutely contradictory, character is of the first importance. What is that of Mr. Reade? By testimony of men who have known him for twenty years, and whose names, if we could publish them, would carry conviction of their honesty, Mr. Reade is an upright, good, and disinterested man, very obstinate and impulsive, and a little too contemptuous of public opinion. We are therefore required to believe that a man of this character, in the receipt of Rs. 3,000 a-month, violated repeated orders of Government, and the ordinary instincts of English gentlemen, in order to have the use of two horses, two elephants, and two mirrors without paying for their keep; that, when found out, he coerced an intimate friend into telling a lie to conceal the transaction; and followed up this oppression by a long series of perjuries. The antecedent improbability of such a course seems at least striking. The Rajah himself, whose evidence is malignant enough, declares that he never gave Mr. Reade anything except fruit, grapes, and such like, "never thought of offering him coin." Lawyers hold it important to prove some motive adequate at least in some degree to the offence. But in this case we are required to believe that a series of falsehoods, all singularly consistent for falsehoods, were devised in order to conceal an act of oppression committed to save the keep of four animals for two years. It is of course possible that such may have been the case. It is not for witnesses to read the heart, and decide absolutely between two opposing statements, but the balance of probability is certainly in favour of the accused.

That Mr. Reade as an officer of Government was exceedingly to blame we do not attempt to question. He had no business to buy horses of the Rajah at all. If, as he says, he wanted them originally for official duties, he should have reported the purchase to Madras. Still less had he any business to suffer such a transaction to remain unsettled for months, accepting smooth politenesses in excuse for a receipt, and leaving every native to imagine the animals a present from the native noble. Nor have we the slightest sympathy with those who represent the Madras Government as making a victim of Mr. Reade by the appointment of the Commission. The anonymous letter was fairly sent to him for reply, and after the Rajah's second note the Government had no option save to leave the native prince an opportunity of substantiating his charges. But that Mr. Reade's official imprudences involve any breach of morality or truthfulness is in our judgment far from proved.

One result of this trial seems sufficiently clear. Henceforward every political officer in Madras must maintain towards all native princes a position of armed neutrality. The slightest approach to intimacy is dangerous. To accept grapes, even if thirsty from a ride, may be construed into a willingness to be bribed. To borrow a horse is dangerous, unless the political is sure that his butler is honest, and that the intriguants who infest every native court are all equally friendly. Above all, to buy a piece of furniture or an elephant is fatal. The political must stand aloof, and sacrifice every opportunity of acquiring influence, creating friendship, or preventing treasonable intrigue to a morbid care for the spotless purity of his own pecuniary character. If he cannot assume this attitude he must either so conciliate the native by concessions that accusations would be inconvenient, or run the risk of a trial for his commission.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HINGOLEE, Sept. 24.—I hasten to give you information of the execution of Sheikh Hymudh and five of his followers on the 23rd, at Digrus, the scene of their atrocities. You may recollect my writing to you in February last, informing you of the advent of one Sheikh Hymudh, an Arab Chaoos or leader, with five hundred men from Hyderabad, into the Oomerkheir district, and of his taking forcible possession of the Ghurree of Digrus, killing the eldest son of the Deshmookh, and putting two other young ones and all the female relations found in the zenana to the torture. The Deshmookh, having fortunately for himself been absent at the time, escaped. Having remained at Digrus ten days unmolested, Sheikh Hymudh detached half of his party to Malawah, a large kusha, or market-town, in the Oomerkheir district, and entirely sacked it, obtaining large sums of money, besides valuable property, by torture, from its inhabitants. I think I told you also that this party, when they had done all the mischief they could, were besieged by a force under a zillehdar, composed of Nizamut Juwans (ill paid and worse armed, without any ammunition), furnished by the Naiks of Oomerkheir and Nirmul. Of course no sooner they appeared before the Ghurree of Digrus than they were disgracefully beaten back and followed three miles by Sheikh Hymudh, who retained the Ghurree and his supremacy in Digrus and its vicinity until Brigadier Hill advanced to invest it from Ruswunthunggur, when, in consequence of timely information sent by the Government Arabs at that place, Sheikh Hymudh evacuated Digrus a day before the contingent force appeared before it, dispersed his party, chiefly composed of Arabs, who found ready protection and concealment with the Government posts scattered over the country. Sheikh Hymudh himself hurried away to Hyderabad, where he gave himself up to the Nizam's minister, by whom he was placed in confinement in the kotwallee, where he continued for many months, it being generally believed that in consequence of the influence of the Arabs in the city no further proceedings would be taken against him, and that there was an understanding that the imprisonment would be relaxed as time passed over, and he and his acts forgotten. I believe the minister's attention was called by the Resident to this improper leniency, and the notice thus taken of it ended in the trial and condemnation months afterwards of Sheikh Hymudh Chaoos, and five of his party—three Arabs and two Hindoos—one of the latter being an impostor, representing himself to be the grandson of Nowsajee, the famous Naik, who so gallantly fell whilst defending the Ghurree of Nowah against us forty years ago. The other Hindoo was a Vakeel, who took an active part in directing Sheikh Hymudh's attention to people in Malawah possessed of property. Sheikh Hymudh gave himself up to the minister to evade the pursuit of one of Brigadier Hill's detachments of the contingent cavalry. He did so, confident that the influence of the Arabs in the city of Hyderabad would save him from destruction. What the Minister said at the time is only conjectural, but it is supposed he was to expiate his crimes by imprisonment only. That in the Kotwallee is rigorous or otherwise according to the influence possessed by the prisoners; that of Sheikh Hymudh was made sufficiently agreeable to him, and it is understood he had nothing to complain of on that score. What led to more severe measures being taken against him can only be guessed at. The Minister suddenly resolved upon trying him and five of his followers; they were brought before the Foujdaria Adawlut in the city, convicted, and condemned to death, and, as I said at the commencement of my letter, were sent up from Hyderabad to Digrus, and there decapitated—a body of the Hyderabad contingent cavalry being present to witness the execution, which took place yesterday, the 23rd instant. The opinions are various as to the effect this measure of justice will have in the territories of his Highness the Nizam. It is, I think, much to be regretted that the trial did not take place months ago, so that swift execution might have been done upon these villains, and their execution pointed to as a just act of severity of the Native Government. It would then have been looked upon as a just example; but occurring as it now has done so long after the atrocities at Digrus and Malawah were perpetrated, the natives now believe the execution of Sheikh Hymudh and his colleagues in crime was urged upon the Minister by the British Government—supporting their belief on the ground that the contingent troops were sent to see the sentence carried out. No doubt when one looks at the enormities committed by Sheikh Hymudh and his party, it is impossible to doubt that they richly merited the extreme punishment with which they were visited. But it is not so certain that they were the only parties deserving of death. Who was the prime mover in the atrocious attacks upon Digrus and Malawah is a question that still remains unanswered. It must be borne in mind that Sheikh Hymudh's party, formed chiefly of Arabs, was raised in the city of Hyderabad, left it fully armed and equipped, marched through the country in a body by the usual routes and stages to Digrus unmolested and unquestioned, and on more than one occasion passed by Arabs in the Government service at outposts on the way, without any interruption whatever. It is impossible, therefore, not to be struck with the conviction that more influential men than Sheikh Hymudh Chaoos were at the bottom of this horrible business. I ascribe the movement to the intrigues of the badmashes of the city of Hyderabad, and cannot help connecting it with the plot wherein Suftur-ool-Dumlah, the two Patells of Hiulie—father and son—and the Rajah of Kowlass were in correspondence with an emissary of the Nana Sahib. If Sheikh Hymudh's only object was plunder, why did he move upon Thumpsah, hundreds of miles from Hyderabad, and take with him a person falsely to represent himself as the grandson of Nowsajee Naik? And why was his party chiefly composed of Velyatee Arabs, natives of Arabia? I say it was an advanced guard, a feeling party from the city. Thumpsah was selected as having been once the residence of Nowsajee, and the impostor said to be his grandson was brought forward to raise the country for Sheikh Hymudh. Nowsajee's actual grandson, an imbecile from birth, was with the Government forces at the time, and some of Nowsajee's descendants were aiding the Government troops. I am perhaps going out of my way when I say that I think we have much to fear from the Arabs in this city. Their number at present amounts to about 7,000. Half of this number only are natives of Arabia, the other half are the descendants of Arabs born of native mothers, in many instances equalling their fathers in courage and obstinacy, and hating and despising the Feringhees with a most bitter hatred. Their chiefs possess great influence, both with the Nizam and the minister. They are the principal money lenders to the Government, and the best districts are assigned to them, in which they employ troops of their own tribe, there being nothing to restrain them in the enormities they practice, chiefly in their position of money lenders. They are usurers, and stop at nothing to enforce payment. Since the Hyderabad Contingent has moved out against the Rohillas and other marauding parties, and within the last four months, no less than six dacoities, i.e., the sack of entire villages, have taken place, and much misery has been inflicted upon the rich inhabitants. They talk here of a dour in the cold weather against these wretches, when I hope that condign punishment will overtake them for their cruelty and rapacity.—Poona Observer.

MURDER OF CAPTAIN LEYCESTER.—The diabolical murder of Captain Leycester, the paymaster, is the all-absorbing topic of the moment. On Wednesday, Sept. 28, the event occurred, and, as far as we know, for the first time in its history, Waltair has been the scene of one of the most atrocious tragedies that ever disgusted human nature. About twelve at night the intelligence was first communicated to Captain Mason and Major Strange. The former officers soon after wrote to Mr. Vans Agnew, the principal assistant magistrate, and that gentleman, together with Mr. Reade, the magistrate, were speedily at Captain Leycester's house. From about one o'clock of the morning of Thursday up till near eleven, the magistrate assisted by Mr. Vans Agnew was carrying on a vigorous inquiry, regarding which it would be premature in us to touch. The servants of Captain Leycester were examined. A post-mortem examination of the body was held, the medical testimony was recorded, and other investigations made, with a view to unravel the mystery which at present veils the dark and tragic end of the unfortunate deceased. We have not heard that any clue has come out as a starting point from which to ground any satisfactory theory as to the cause of the murder, and the probable perpetrators, but, no doubt, as the inquiry proceeds, something will develop itself which will afford such clue. All that has transpired we believe is, that the deceased was shot with his own gun, and that some of his household must have been privy to the foul deed. Mr. Reade is this day again engaged in going on with the investigation, and we are sanguine of the result, though ignorant of the measures and means by which a solution of the mystery is likely to be obtained.—Vizagapatam Chronicle.

SECUNDERABAD, 23rd Sept.—One of the principal subjects of gossip here just now is the discovery of a defalcation to a large extent in the Paymaster's office of the Hyderabad Contingent, the culprit being the manager, who has absconded. About ten days ago he sent in his resignation to the paymaster, without assigning any reason. This fact, coupled with the suddenness of the affair, excited the suspicions of Captain Herbert, and he caused an examination of the books to be made. The result was the discovery I have mentioned; a large amount of money in hoondees and bills was unaccounted for. Search was made for the manager, but he was non est inventus, and remains so. His property was seized upon, and upon further inquiry the soucar who cashed the bills, &c. was discovered, and his property has been seized for the present. The unhappy family of the manager have been placed in much distress by this event, and no doubt is entertained that when he is secured, the conviction of his guilt will be brought home to him, and he will share a felon's fate.—Examiner.

THE GOVERNOR AND THE GODAVERY.—Sir Charles Trevelyan, we observe from the Madras Spectator, has determined to explore with his own eyes the waters of the Godavery—a stream three times the length of the river Thames. Rising near the retreat of Rama, amidst the wild scenery of the Western Ghats, she traverses nearly the entire peninsula of Hindoostan, until, after a journey of six hundred miles, she joins the Bay of Bengal. Our contemporary winds up a long article on this river, in the following strain:—"But if there is one fact above all others which leads us to rejoice at the coming visit of Sir Charles Trevelyan to that river, it is the fact that the opening of the Godavery, like every other great work of progress and reform, is a work of difficulty; and difficulties, as we all know, melt away before the eye of the governor like a snow-drift before a noon-day sun. These practical difficulties we may possibly discuss in a future issue. At present we would confine ourselves, as we have done, to congratulating all who are interested in the progress of this Presidency on the fact, that his Excellency has determined to explore the Godavery, not merely by his own agents, but with his own eyes."

THE VIZAGAPATAM INQUIRY.—Mr. H. D. Phillips, Puisne Judge of the Court of Sudder Adawlat, Madras, who was deputed to Vizagapatam as sole commissioner for the purpose of making a public and formal inquiry into the truth of certain imputations of misbehaviour by Mr. C. W. Reade, agent to the Governor in Vizagapatam, having submitted a record of the proceedings held by him at that town, and the notes of the evidence given by the witnesses who appeared for the prosecution and the defence; also a minute by himself in which he has recorded his opinion upon each of the articles of the charge separately, the Government have issued an order from which it will be seen that their decision is unfavourable to Mr. Reade. We give the last five paragraphs:—"Mr. Phillips likewise transmits a minute in which, as required by section XXI. of the Act, he has recorded his opinion upon each of the articles of the charge separately, with the grounds on which it has been formed. Mr. Phillips' finding is, 'that Mr. C. W. Reade is guilty of the four acts imputed to him in the charges laid before the commission.' The Honourable the Governor in Council has perused the whole of these papers with the most anxious attention. He deeply regrets that he can arrive at no other conclusion than that the verdict of the commissioner is fully borne out by the evidence, and that Mr. Reade is guilty of the charges which have been brought against him. Holding this opinion, it has become his Excellency in Council's painful duty to remove Mr. Reade from the office of collector and magistrate, and agent to the Governor of Fort St. George at Vizagapatam, and to suspend him from public employment until the Right Honourable the Secretary of State of India—to whom all the proceedings will be immediately reported—shall have signified Her Majesty's pleasure in the case. Mr. Reade will, on receipt of this order, at once deliver over charge of the Agency and Collectorate to his Acting Principal Assistant, if the gentleman who is to officiate for him has not arrived at Vizagapatam. Until his case be finally decided, he will draw the out-of-employment allowance of his rank. The Government desire to thank Mr. H. D. Phillips for the patience and fairness with which he has carried out the inquiry, and Mr. W. Holloway for the manner in which he has conducted the prosecution on account of Government."

HYDERABAD.—It is rumoured that the Governor-general has decided upon abolishing the appointment of second assistant to the Resident at Hyderabad, at present held by Captain Hastings Fraser, of the 46th Madras N.I. Captain Fraser, however, will be provided for, as a new appointment is to be made, that of paymaster to the Hyderabad, which Captain Fraser will get. At present Captain Herbert holds the combined appointment of paymaster to the Hyderabad subsidiary force and the contingent.

THE SHRIEVATY OF MADRAS for the ensuing year has been placed at the disposal of Mr. E. B. Powell, Principal of the Presidency College. The office was altogether unsolicited by that gentleman.

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BOMBAY MERCANTILE STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—The screw steamers Bombay Castle and United Service, belonging to the Bombay Mercantile Steam Navigation Company, were put up to auction by the company for sale on the 10th October. Both of them were purchased by Khan Mahomed Habibbhoj, a Khoja merchant, the former for Rs. 1,26,000, and the latter for Rs. 1,01,000.

STATE CARRIAGE.—It is stated that Sir Cursetjee Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Baronet, has ordered out from England a splendid and handsome state carriage, of the value of Rs. 14,000, and which is said to be now on its way to Bombay.

DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.—The following discharged European soldiers from the Lahore division embarked at Kurrachee on board the ship North, commander Boyd, of 1,268 tons register, on the morning of the 10th Sept., and sailed for England on the same evening:—Captain Sir W. Hamilton, Bart., and Lady; Captain Percival; Lieuts. C. S. Jackson, and W. O. Brien, of the Bengal Artillery; Lieutenants W. J. Richardes, A. Twyford, and H. C. Kemball, of the 3rd European Light Cavalry; Lieutenant Woodwards, Bombay Artillery; Assistant Surgeon Atkinson, 39th Bengal N.I.; Mr. Peat, Supervisor of Medicines; 400 non-commissioned rank and file, seven women, and eight children.

POONA, Sept. 28.—Yesterday evening, at a brigade parade of the whole of the troops in garrison at this station, Major-general Sir Hugh Rose, G.C.B., presented the Persian medals to the light company of the 25th regiment N.L.I., with all due ceremony. On the same occasion the gallant general presented the Order of Merit to two men of the above regiment.

THE ENAM QUESTION.—The Enam question, we are informed, is finally decided. All inquiry is to cease. A tax equal to one-fourth the average assessment of the neighbourhood is to be flung over all, and a succession duty. Any proprietor who considers his title clear, and objects to pay the new clouth may cause an inquiry to be instituted, and his title established by the commissioners. This proposal, though not without some objectionable features, seems on the whole reasonable and fair. There is an end of inquiry at all events, of investigations protracted for half a century and terminating in a decree of ouster. There is an end, too, of all dispute as to the existence and perpetuity of a right of property in enams. At the same time the measure, if accepted, ought to produce a considerable revenue. The enam estates are supposed to withdraw two millions a-year from the Treasury, and a fourth of that sum will be equal to five times the proceeds of the last Stamp Act. Whether the tax will strike the enamdars as fair is a different question. Probably the richer members of the class will pay as willingly as men ever pay money,—glad to escape the annoyances of inquiry, the accusation of concealing papers, the uncertainty as to the ultimate position of their families. The pauperised enamdars, men mortgaged up to their ears, will, doubtless, consider the terms hard, and may possibly demand investigation en masse. In this case, and this only, the measure will prove an administrative failure.—Friend of India.

BANK OF BOMBAY.—At a meeting of the Directors of the Bank of Bombay, held on Thursday, the 6th of Oct., in the Bank-office, Mr. James Blair, Deputy Secretary, was promoted to be Secretary and Treasurer, from the date of Mr. Stuart's retirement in March next. Another special meeting of the proprietors of the Bank was also held the same day; when, on the motion of Sir Cursetjee Jamsetjee, seconded by Framjee Nusserwanjee, Esq., it was unanimously resolved that a gratuity of rupees thirty thousand be presented to Mr. Stuart on his retirement.

DISTRIBUTION OF MEDALS.—On Monday, the 18th September, the Hyderabad brigade paraded at half-past 5 p.m., to witness the distribution of medals to H.M.'s 64th regiment, for their gallant services in Persia; the troops were drawn up in contiguous quarter distance columns, 31st troop of artillery on the right, 1st Belooch battalion on the left, 64th centre; the recipients being drawn in front of the column. Major Mockler having addressed the men, Mrs. Mockler, after a short and appropriate speech, proceeded to present the medals, pinning them on the breast of each person, assisted by the other ladies of the station, who had enhanced the interest of the ceremony by gracing it with their ever welcome presence. Before being dismissed, the men gave three hearty cheers for their commanding officer, and the ladies.—Sind Kossid.

SALE OF THE FRENCH SHIP "AJAX."—In virtue of a decree of the French vice-consul of this port, Messrs. Menesse and Co. have sold by public auction the wreck of the French ship Ajax, Capt. Renaud, of 458 tons register, coppered to about eighteen feet and heavily copper-fastened, with her masts, bowsprit, windlass gear, etc., as she now lies at the Custom-house basin. The wreck was disposed of to the highest bidder, one Noora Ahmed, for the sum of ten thousand eight hundred rupees.

COMMISSIONER IN SCINDE.—The Right Honourable the Governor in Council has appointed Mr. J. D. Inverarity, of the Civil Service, to be Commissioner in Scinde, in succession to Sir H. B. E. Frere, K.C.B., appointed a Member of the Supreme Council of India.

MASTER ATTENDANT.—Consequent on the separation of the duties of Master Attendant from those of the Dockyard, the following appointments are made:—Captain W. Barker, of the Indian Navy, to be Master Attendant and Conservator of the Port. Mr. J. E. C. Pryce and Mr. W. Corke to be respectively First and Second Assistants to the Master Attendant.

BELGAUM.—Captain (Brevet Lieutenant-colonel) H. Pelly, 8th Regiment N. I., Assistant Adjutant-general S. D. A., in anticipation of his promotion to a majority regimentally, on the retirement of Major Thomas, has given over charge of his office and intended proceeding to join his regiment at Sattara on Monday, the 26th Sept. His successor, Major Coley, had arrived at Belgaum, and has assumed charge of the office of Assistant Adjutant-general. Captain Combe, of the 18th N. I., is now acting superintendent of bazaars at Belgaum. Mr. Bertie, a sub-assistant in the Inam Commission, has retired on a pension, after thirty years of good and faithful service.

UNIVERSITY OF BOMBAY.—The matriculation examination of the Bombay University commenced on the 3rd of October, simultaneously at the town-hall in Bombay, and at the assembly-rooms in Poonah. It is satisfactory to notice that eighty-eight candidates presented themselves for examination at Bombay, and forty at Poonah, making a total of 128 candidates.

THE GOVERNOR.—Lord Elphinstone arrived at the Presidency on Tuesday, the 11th October, by rail, and has taken up his residence at the Government House, Malabar Point.

OPERATIONS AGAINST THE WAGHERS.—Her Majesty's steam frigate Zenobia, J. Tronson, commander, arrived at Bombay on the 11th October, bringing the latest intelligence from the Island of Beyt—the successful result of the operations of the force sent against the Waghers. The Fort and the Island of Beyt were taken on the 7th October, so that we have got possession of the enemy's stronghold, and, in all probability, the capture of the smaller villages and towns lately occupied by the Waghers will be effected without striking a blow or firing a shot. Our loss is two officers killed, two officers wounded, thirteen men of the 28th regiment killed and thirty-three wounded; nine men of the 6th Native Infantry killed and twelve wounded. The names of the officers killed are—Lieut. McCormack, 28th Foot, and Ensign Guillaume, 6th N.I. The force arrived off Beyt on the 3rd. On the morning of the 4th, two boats armed from H.M.'s steamer Ferooz, two from H.M.'s steamer Zenobia, and one from H.M.'s steamer Victoria, the whole under the command of Lieut. Chitty, I.N., were sent to intercept the boats belonging to the enemy. On the 5th, the Ferooz, Zenobia, Victoria, Clyde, and Constance, opened fire on the fort, which was continued all day. On the 6th, the troops landed under cover of the guns of the fleet, at 2 P.M. The enemy made a stout resistance, when sixty to eighty of our men were killed or wounded. The Zenobia has brought the following wounded officers and men:—Captain Glasspoole; Lieutenant Grant; thirty-three men of H.M.'s 28th Regiment; ten men of the 6th N.I.; and two men of the Marine Battalion. The result of these operations is the opening of the passage into the districts south of the island; and, in all probability, our troops will now move on to Dwarka. Considering that the casualties on our side are very slight, and that during the disembarkation of our troops the enemy was in a position to open an effective fire from his field-guns and musketry placed within point-blank range of the boats, the attack seems to have been well managed, and the advantage that has been achieved is creditable to every officer and man engaged in the operation.—Bombay Gazette.

COLONEL C. H. SOMERSET, C.B., of the 72nd Highlanders, eldest son of Lieutenant-general Sir Henry Somerset, K.C.B., Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, has been appointed by the War-Office authorities to be Deputy Adjutant-general of her Majesty's forces serving in the Bombay Presidency, vice Colonel E. H. Greathed, C.B., 8th Foot, who has resigned that appointment.

"WELL OF ENGLISH, PURE AND UNDEFILED."—We have had some very amusing native letters shown to us, one of which is such a clever specimen of what a native can accomplish with a dictionary and a little knowledge of English, that I subjoin a verbatim copy. It is intended to convey information to the Executive engineer that the post-office window was blown out by the storm:—"Honoured Master,—Yesterday evening came one great hurricane, valve of window aperture not fasten, first make great trepidation and palpitation, then precipitate into precinct. God grant master more long life and more great post.—I remain, honoured master's most obedient servant, PURVOE OF ENGLISH DEPARTMENT."

THE ELEPHANTA.—The electric storm which passed over the town and island of Bombay on Monday, the 26th Sept., came from a direction between N.N.E. and N.E. Threatening Bombay from an early hour of the day, it commenced at 1.55 P.M. in light rain of gradually increasing quantity. At 2.30 the electric discharges were heavy, and at 2.45 were so close at passing as to give but an interval of 1.5 second between flash and report. The rain at the culmination of the storm became very heavy. A peculiarity attending the squall was, that while it commenced over and about Bassein at 11.50 A.M. in heavy rain, it passed along the course of the Tanna creek in violent gusts of wind, attended by rapid discharges of electricity, reaching Bombay in reduced strength, during the passage of the storm over the island. Three vessels in the harbour, the Waban, Taptee, and Nerbudda, anchored at diversely extended positions, were struck by the electric fluid at their mastheads, injuring the spars so struck more or less from truck to kelson, and proving fatal to one man on board the Nerbudda. Had these vessels been fitted with the lightning conductors of Sir Snow Harris, the strong probability is that they would have passed unscathed.

OFFICIAL CHANGES.—The Poona Observer says:—"It is rumoured that Mr. P. W. LeGeyt is about to retire from the service, and that Mr. Henry Young, Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay, will succeed him in the appointment of member of the Legislative Council in India. It is also rumoured that Messrs. Fawcett, Reeves, and Malet, Bombay C. S., will retire from service, and proceed to England in March and April next. Indeed these are signs of a very general 'flitting' about that time—the Right Honourable the Governor and his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief leading the exodus. This will necessarily be the cause of an infusion of new blood into the various offices vacated,—not, we think, in some cases without being very much wanted."

THE HON. ALEXANDER STEWART, lieutenant in the Royal Artillery, serving in the Bengal Presidency, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to his Excellency Lieut.-gen. Sir Henry Somerset, K.C.B., Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, and directed to proceed to Bombay without delay. This officer is a son of the Earl of Galloway, or Baron Stewart of Garlies, by the seventh daughter of the fifth Duke of Beaufort, uncle of Sir Henry Somerset. He was born in 1838, and was appointed lieutenant in the Royal Artillery in 1856.

BELGAUM COMMAND.—Under instructions from Government, his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has been pleased to direct that the brigade command at Belgaum should revert to the previous arrangement under which the command of the station was exercised by the general officer commanding the division.

MR. J. HOLDER, head clerk of the Marine Store Branch of the Military Auditor-general's office, died at the European-general Hospital, on Friday the 23rd September. His death is deeply lamented by all who knew him.

MR. R. B. BARTON, barrister-at-law, retires from practice at Bombay, and proceeds to England on the 26th instant.

MR. COOPER, Traffic Manager, G. I. P. Railway, proceeds to England shortly on sick certificate, and that Mr. Lowe, Goods' Manager, is to act for him during his absence.

THE MONSOON.—The total fall of rain at Bombay up to Saturday, the 8th October, is as follows:—At Byculla, 82 in. 25 cts.; in the fort, 80 in. 36 cts.; and at Colaba, 77 in. 15 cts. The south-west monsoon is considered to be at an end.

THE MILITARY COMMISSION.—Colonels Jameson, Burn, and Balfour, the commissioners appointed to examine into the military expenditure of the Bombay Presidency, with a view to making reductions therein, are now in Poonah, in full pursuit of their avocation.

THE JHANSI PRIZE JEWELS.—The first day's sale of these jewels realised above 34,000 rupees. Several lots were bespoke and ticketed as sold, on behalf of his Excellency the Governor of Bombay, who, it is said, intends making a present of them to the Queen. There are among them some splendid jewels, originally intended, we believe, to ornament a head-dress. They are of the finest gold, a wavy circle of gems running all about the edge, while in other places the eye would delight in tracing the fanciful arabesques which, as it were, flow over the shining metal. The sale closed on the 8th October. The amount realised is about one lakh and seventy thousand rupees. There was much spirited bidding, and all the lots were paid for at once. Great satisfaction appears to be felt by all the purchasers.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, Nov. 7, 1859.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA IN THE FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT, 1857-58.

THE COURT OF DIRECTORS having approved of the suggestion of the Indian Government that the system of Accounts at all the Presidencies should be assimilated, it was resolved that a General Department of Accounts should be inaugurated from the 1st of May, 1858, and that the offices of Audit, Pay, and Account, at all the Presidencies, including the Punjab, should come under the Government of India from that date. Mr. E. Harrison, First Assistant to the Accountant-general to the Government of India, was accordingly despatched to Madras and Bombay to explain the Bengal system and superintend its partial introduction. In consequence of a special report upon the principal Central Offices of Account in Bengal, the North-West Provinces, and the Punjab, Captain C. H. Dickens was appointed to the sole charge of the Central Office in the Lower Provinces, with instructions to reorganize the system of that office which was subsequently to be extended to the other offices of Account. The Marine Department in Pegu was likewise revised and placed on a proper footing. The old balances or the General Books of the Accountant-general's office, which amounted to upwards of £666,000, were adjusted, and the unadjusted balances of the Public Works Department were reduced from nearly £400,000 to less than £43,500. With the exception of works in the Military Department, and a few inexpensive but urgent works, the embarrassed state of the finances rendered it necessary to stop all public works, and to reduce the establishments of that department to the lowest possible scale. The work of the Calcutta Mint during this year was great, beyond all precedent. The amount of merchants' bullion received was valued at Rs. 6,10,36,269, of which Rs. 4,86,577 worth was in gold, and Rs. 6,05,49,693 in silver—showing an enormous influx of the latter metal. To meet these extraordinary exigencies no slight exertions were needed. "The surplus power of the Laminating Department was turned to account. The Staining Department worked extra hours for 242 out of 274 working days in the year. The Assay Office was kept open nearly eleven hours daily; and the Laboratory apparatus was rendered complete by the addition of a new drying furnace, a large and efficient water-still, and two English assay balances." The total out-turn of the Coining Department amounted to 134,381,262 pieces of all descriptions of coin, of which 29,189 alone were of gold. The silver coinage amounted to 84,599,247 pieces—viz., 69,961,750 whole rupees, 2,056,391 half-rupees, 4,245,786 quarter-rupees, and 8,335,320 one-eighth ditto. Of the 49,752,826 copper coins, 34,056,462 single pycce were a portion of the copper blanks supplied by the Court of Directors, but all the others were manufactured in the Mint—viz., 1,214,714 double pycce, 3,687,735 half-pycce, 3,167,399 pie pieces, 3,543,581 whole cents, 3,051,816 half-cents, and 1,031,119 quarter-cents. Notwithstanding the temporary refusal of accommodation by the Bank of Bengal, owing to the run for silver in exchange for notes, a profitable amount of business was transacted in the course of the year; a dividend of 11 per cent. having been declared on the 4th of July, 1857, and another of 14 per cent. on the 5th of January, 1858.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE STRAITS SETTLEMENTS, 1857-58.

THE total amount of revenue collected in these settlements during the official year 1857-58 was Rs. 1,262,918, against Rs. 1,163,308 in the preceding year. This considerable total was made up as follows:—Excise farms, Rs. 920,273; lands, 165,866; judicial fees and fines, 71,455; miscellaneous, 105,324. The revenue collected at Pinang amounted to Rs. 319,522, viz.:—Excise, 231,602; land, 56,489; fees and fines, 28,354; miscellaneous, 3,077. Singapore furnished Rs. 770,796, viz.:—Excise, 561,558; lands, 74,059; fees and fines, 35,339; miscellaneous, 99,838. From Malacca was obtained a revenue of Rs. 172,599, under the following heads:—Excise, 127,110; lands, 35,318; fees and fines, 7,763; miscellaneous, 2,407.

The Commissioners of Police complain that their force is too small, inadequately paid, and overworked; while the inhabitants protest against the expenditure of their municipal funds for police purposes to an extent that leaves nothing for other and equally necessary objects. It is stated, however, that neither the pay of the police nor their numbers can possibly be reduced, and it, therefore, remains for Government to decide whether it will augment its present contribution of Rs. 750 per mensem. The police as a body numbers 307 at Pinang, 317 at Singapore, and 133 at Malacca; while the expenses are at Pinang Rs. 5,797, at Singapore, 7,332, and at Malacca 1,869 per month.

On the 1st May, 1857, there were 1,275 convicts at Pinang, and 252 were received in the course of the year, making a total of 1,527; but on the other hand, 99 died, 14 escaped, and 1 was liberated—leaving 1,413. The total expense for the year was Rs. 77,516, or Rs. 4 9 an. per mensem for each convict. The value of the labour performed by these convicts is estimated at Rs. 106,774, or Rs. 29,158 more than the expense of their keep. Among the prisoners there were 45 masons, 46 carpenters, 18 blacksmiths, 22 brick and tile makers, and 16 miscellaneous artisans, whose labour in the Public Works department is valued at Rs. 30,617. At Singapore on the 1st May, 1857, the number of convicts was 2,193, augmented by 183 arrivals to 2,376, but decreased by 218 dead, 4 escaped, 6 time expired, 1 pardoned, and 8 removed to other stations, leaving 2,139 on the 30th April, 1858. The total cost of these convicts amounted to Rs. 1,18,244, or 4½ rupees per mensem for each convict. The value of their labour is computed at Rs. 137,270. The artificers consisted of 69 masons, 60 carpenters, 15 blacksmiths, 28 stonecutters (all Chinese), 28 brick and tilemakers, and 13 painters. Malacca, on the 1st May, 1857, contained only 556 convicts, who were joined by 49 from Ceylon in the course of the year; but on the 30th April, 1858, there were no more than 534, as 40 died, 24 were time-expired, and 7 removed. The annual expenditure amounted to Rs. 32,191, or Rs. 4 15 an. a-head per month, and their estimated labour to the cost of their maintenance. Thus the total number of convicts in the Straits on the 1st May, 1858, was 4,086, and the cost of their maintenance and supervision Rs. 227,951, or a monthly average of 4 rs. 10 an. per head. It is reckoned that the labour performed by them in making and repairing roads and public buildings fully equals the above expenditure. The deaths during the year were 357, or about 8 per cent. Each station, it may be mentioned, boasts of a sheriff's jail and a house of correction; the former being used for prisoners awaiting trial, those sentenced to simple imprisonment, and those confined for debt; while the latter is open only to prisoners condemned to hard labour.

The local disbursements during the year in question, exclusive of military charges, amounted to Rs. 939,991, or Rs. 337,426 less than the revenue. Of this amount Rs. 232,070 were expended at Pinang, Rs. 105,836 at Malacca, and Rs. 300,328 at Singapore. The Municipal Funds for 1857, out of which the police and the conservation of towns are paid, amounted to 103,547 dollars; viz., 39,702 at Pinang, 11,248 at Malacca, and 57,597 at Singapore; the expenditure, however, was greater than the receipts.

The imports during the year 1857-58 show a steady increase, attaining the considerable value of Rs. 67,052,939, while the exports are stated at Rs. 57,835,839, or a total annual trade exceeding twelve millions sterling.

NARRATIVE OF THE COURSE OF LEGISLATION, 1857-58.

THE Acts passed during this official year run from No. VIII. to No. XXXV. of 1857, both inclusive, and from No. I. to No. XVIII. of 1858.

Act VIII. of 1857 (an Act to amend Act XIX. of 1847—the Articles of War for the Native Army) was introduced and passed on the 16th May; its object being "to remove impediments to the speedy convening of courts-martial for the trial and punishment of native officers and soldiers for offences against the Articles of War." The Governor-General in Council is hereby authorised to empower any officer having the command of troops at once to convene a General, District, or Garrison Court-martial, and to confirm or remit the sentence of such Court. Five Commissioned Officers are required to constitute a General Court martial, but it rests with the commanding officer, if authorised by Government, to determine whether they shall be entirely European or native commissioned officers; heretofore the latter were almost invariably appointed.

Act IX. of 1857 (an Act to repeal Act VI. of 1856—concerning exclusive privileges to inventors) was introduced and passed on the 9th May. The former Act was repealed because her Majesty's Law Officers pronounced it illegal, as encroaching upon the Royal prerogative of granting letters patent.

Act X. of 1857 (an Act to amend Act XXXVII. of 1855, which removed certain districts inhabited by Sonthals, &c., from the operation of the general laws) restores to their proper Zillahs certain Pergunnahs and parts of Pergunnahs injudiciously inserted in the Schedule to the Act now amended.

Act XI. of 1857 (an Act for the prevention, trial, and punishment of offences against the State), though introduced on the 15th December, 1855, was not passed until the 30th May, 1857. Previously, neither the Government of Bengal nor of Madras could sentence to death a criminal convicted of treason, or rebellion, or any other offence against the State. This power is now conferred, together with that of confiscating the property of the offender; a power that already existed in Bombay.

Act XII. of 1857 (an Act to authorise the arrest and detention, within the Ports of the Settlement of Prince of Wales' Island, Singapore, and Malacca, of junks or native vessels suspected to be piratical), enables the chief resident civil authority at any station to cause any suspected vessel to be searched, and, if reasonable ground for suspicion be afforded, detained until the case has been reported to the Governor of the Settlement.

Act XIII. of 1857 (an Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to the cultivation of the Poppy and the manufacture of Opium in the Presidency of Fort William) is supplemental to Act XXI. of 1856. The first portion "authorises the practice prevailing in the agencies with respect to the delivery of Opium to the Government officers and gives a legal status, which it did not before possess, to the office of Sub-Deputy Agent;" while "the latter portion provides penalties for the unauthorised cultivation of the Poppy, and for the connivance of Zemindars and officers of Government in such cultivation."

Act XIV. of 1857 (an Act to make further provision for the trial and punishment of certain offences relating to the Army, and of offences against the State) was introduced and passed on the 6th June. This Act does not apply to British born subjects, and was originally limited to one year, but subsequently extended by Act XXII. of 1858 to the end of 1859. Its tendency is to increase the punishment of acts of mutiny and of attempts to seduce soldiers from their duty. Such offences were, therefore, made subject to a capital sentence, or transportation for life, or imprisonment not exceeding fourteen years, with forfeiture of property.

Act XV. of 1857 (an Act to regulate the establishment of Printing Presses, and to restrain, in certain cases, the circulation of printed books and papers) was introduced on 13th June, and was passed in the same day. Its duration was limited to one year, during which "the Indian press was placed temporarily in a position similar to that which it held permanently" before the Emancipation Act, No. XI. of 1835: no Press could be kept or used without licence from the Government.

Act XVI. of 1857 (an Act to make temporary provision for the trial and provision of heinous offences in certain districts) was also a temporary enactment passed on the same day with the preceding one. Though originally limited to one year, its action has since been extended until the end of 1859. This Act "renders all persons, except British-born subjects and their children, committing any heinous offence in any district or place in which Martial Law is proclaimed, or to which the Governor-general in Council may extend the provisions of the Act, liable to death, or transportation for life, or imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding fourteen years, and to forfeiture of all their property and effects of every description." By "heinous offences" is meant "all crimes against person or property attended with great personal violence, and all crimes committed with the intention of assisting those who are waging war against the State."

Act XVII. of 1857 (an Act to provide temporarily for the apprehension and trial of Native Officers and Soldiers for mutiny and desertion) has also been extended, by Act XXII. of 1858, to the end of 1859. By this Act "Sessions Judges and any other persons invested with this power by the Executive Government or the Commissioners of Provinces" were authorised "to try officers and soldiers of the native army for mutiny or desertion, and to pass a final sentence of death, transportation, or imprisonment." Provisions were also made for the apprehension of mutineers and deserters.

Act XVIII. of 1857 (an Act relating to the issuing of writs or process against certain members of the family, household, and retinue of his late Highness the Nabob of the Carnatic) was passed on the 4th July, to give time to the family and retinue of the late Nabob to petition her Majesty in Council against the cessation of the privilege of exemption from the process and jurisdiction of Courts of Justice, which was held by the Supreme Court of Madras to have ceased with the Nabob's death.

Act XIX. of 1857 (an Act for the incorporation and regulation of Joint Stock Companies and other Associations, either with or without limited liability of the members thereof), following the English Statute 19 and 20 Vic., c. 47, enables seven or more persons associated for any lawful purpose to form themselves into an incorporated company, with or without limited liability.

Act XX. of 1857 (an Act to amend Act IX., of 1850—constituting Small Cause Courts at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay) authorises the local Governments to raise the rate of diet money from one and a half to three annas a day, and in case of illness to six annas.

Act XXI. of 1857 (an Act to make better provision for the order and good Government of the suburbs of Calcutta and of the station of Howrah) extends to the places above-named such provisions of the Police and Conservancy Acts of 1856 as are deemed suitable and advantageous.

Act XXII. of 1857 (an Act to establish and incorporate an University at Bombay) was "passed in pursuance of the resolution of the Government of India, dated the 12th December, 1856." "The body corporate consists of a Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor, and not less than 26 Fellows. The degrees which the University is empowered to confer are those of Bachelor of Arts, Master of Arts, Bachelor of Laws, Licentiate of Medicine, Doctor of Medicine, and Master of Civil Engineering."

Act XXIII. of 1857 (an Act to provide for the good order and discipline of certain Volunteer Corps, and to invest them with certain powers) was introduced on the 27th June, and passed on the 11th July. By this Act the Articles of War for European troops, so far as they relate to Commissioned Officers, are extended to Volunteer Corps on actual service.

Act XXIV. of 1857 (an Act to authorise the levy of port dues and fees at the present rates for a further period of six months), introduced on the 11th, was passed on the 25th July. Its object and duration are specified in its title.

Act XXV. of 1857 (an Act to render Officers and Soldiers in the Native Army liable to forfeiture of property for mutiny, and to provide for the adjudication and recovery of forfeitures of property in certain cases), introduced on the 11th July, was passed on the 1st August. This Act speaks for itself.

Act XXVI. of 1857 (an Act for regulating Ferries in the Settlement of Prince of Wales' Island, Singapore, and Malacca) enables the Government to establish Ferries in any part of the Settlement, and to regulate the tolls to be levied; the management of the Ferries and the collection of the tolls being vested, however, in the Municipal Commissioners.

Act XXVII. of 1857 (an Act to establish and incorporate a University at Madras) is similar to Act XXII. The body corporate consists of a Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor, and not less than thirty Fellows.

BOOKS.

The Universal Review. No. IX. London: Wm. H. Allen and Co.

Although the current number contains no article especially devoted to India, there is, nevertheless, a very readable review of Sir Emerson Tennent's great work on "Ceylon," enlivened by copious extracts. There is also an excellent paper on "Public Well-being," full of important matter and suggestive of deep thought on sanitarian questions. The paper on "The Defences of England" takes a comprehensive view of all that has been said or written on that subject during the present year, and entertains by no means a desponding view of the position of this country, whether as regards France, or any other aggressive Power. "Touching Sermons and the Makers of them" is an exceedingly entertaining paper, abounding in anecdote, and yet not deficient in earnestness and a proper reverence for sacred things. The concluding article on "Manly Sports—their Use and their Abuse," we especially commend to the attention of our readers, not even excluding such of the fair sex as are curious to learn in what manner the lords of creation recreate themselves in their absence, and the sort of society they occasionally frequent when addicted to "Sport."

Blackwood's Magazine. No. DXXIX. Wm. Blackwood and Sons.

In this number the third and concluding part is given of Captain Speke's narrative of the Discovery of the Victoria Nyanza, the supposed source of the Nile. Though decidedly valuable as a contribution to our geographical knowledge, it must be admitted that there is some very dry reading in the journal that records the wanderings of the gallant explorer. The paper on "Allied Operations in China" is full of excellent sense, and takes a very proper view of the impolicy of admitting the French to play a conspicuous part in the East. Already France has a powerful squadron in the Eastern Seas, which could at any time be directed with crushing effect against our unprotected colonies. All that is wanted is "an able ambassador or envoy, with an enterprising admiral and general, backed by ten thousand men. Surely Great Britain can produce these. It is by acting alone that she will best impress upon the solid Chinaman an idea of her undiminished power, and it is by obtaining redress single-handed that she will best allay the excitement which has very naturally followed throughout the East upon the news of the bloody repulse at the Peiho—results which we do not believe will be obtained, or at any rate met with effect, if we are to again act in China under the shadow of French tricolours." By an easy transition the reader of "Maga" then passes on to an admirable paper, written with great spirit, on "The Future of India and her Army." Under the somewhat transparent disguise of "a friendly letter by the Overland Mail," an evidently experienced member of the "writer caste," passes in review the more puzzling features of the recent mutiny, and draws attention to the prophetic warnings uttered by the late lamented Sir Henry Lawrence. He is also in favour of the localisation of native corps and castes. The sepoys, he is of opinion, learn more harm than good from "foreign travel." He discovers that "he is part of an extensive brotherhood scattered over the whole peninsula of India;" and that "in every cantonment of India there are men with the same feelings, the same aspirations as himself. He learns that in every regiment there are malcontents with like grievances, real or supposed, as his own. In any season of excitement, therefore, there is continual correspondence between men of different regiments who have at some previous time been stationed in the same cantonment." Thus, "a disaffected man at Peshawur" is enabled "quietly to feel the pulse of a comrade at Dacca, or, if need be, to scatter sparks of sedition in the lines of a still more remote station in Pegu." The transfer of the local European army to the Horse-Guards is deprecated with considerable fervour, and the inconveniences of such a measure are pointed out with clearness and precision. The present position of Europeans in India is next discussed, in a sad, foreboding strain, but with genuine eloquence. In a few words, this is by far the best and most interesting paper on the subject of which it treats with which we have yet made acquaintance.

Notes on the Wounded from the Mutiny in India, with a Description of the Preparations of Gunshot Injuries contained in the Museum at Fort Pitt. By George Williamson, M.D. London: John Churchill.

Even they who have never felt a wound will scarce be disposed to jest at scars after glancing through Dr. Williamson's catalogue of horrors. In truth, the cypress sadly overshadows the laurel, and the shout of victory too soon gives place to screams of agony, or the low moanings of exhaustion. Dr. Williamson's object, however, is not to strengthen the hands of the Peace-at-all-price Party, but to furnish materials, so far as the Indian mutiny supplied them, towards "ascertaining the results of different wars, in the several classes and species of wounds, and in the proportion which those classes and species bear to each other, and to the total by all wounds." One "very satisfactory feature in the classified return of invalided wounded by the mutiny," is stated to be the "large number of cases of gunshot compound fracture of the femur, where the patients have recovered with good useful limbs, as compared with the number of thigh-stump cases, and the total by all wounds." Out of 743 wounded soldiers landed from India, eleven "recovered with good useful limbs," or 1.49 per cent. "This is a large proportion compared with the result of the Crimean war, viz. 8 out of 2,296, or 0.34 per cent." The difference is attributed to "the facilities afforded by the dooley for the successful treatment of this severest of all forms of compound fracture." The total number of wounded who had arrived at Gravesend up to the 31st of March, 1859, was 603, of whom 193 have been sent to duty, 67 to modified duty, 263 invalided, 7 have died, and 73 remain "undisposed of." Although newspaper critics are supposed to know enough of everything to be able at least to find fault, we are constrained to confess our inability in the present instance to do even so much as that. On the contrary, the tendency of our ignorance is to praise and commend at least the lithographic drawings, though they make one shudder at realising their true significance; and we can readily imagine that to professional men this record of human suffering will prove both interesting and valuable.

ALLEN'S MAPS OF INDIA & CHINA.

MAP of INDIA; showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorates, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways and telegraphs are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP of INDIA; compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Honourable East India Company, with the railways and telegraphs. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

MAP of the ROUTES in INDIA; with Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies, and shows also the railways and telegraphs.

MAP of INDIA and CHINA, BURMAH, SIAM, the MALAY PENINSULA, and the EMPIRE of ANAM. On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. 16s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

MAP of ARABIA, from all the most recent Authorities, by order of the Court of Directors of the East India Company. Size, 3 ft. 3 in. high; 2 ft. 3 in. wide. On cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

"Mr. Stoquer's former works, and his well known proficiency in the military sciences, will insure a favourable reception for this very useful book, which possesses the advantage of compressing into one portable volume a vast mass of information on military subjects, arranged especially for reference. No one could be better qualified than Mr. Stoquer for such a task, and certainly he has accomplished it in a very able manner. In a volume which occupies but little room, the officer and soldier may here command at a glance the cream of many valuable works, and obtain information on almost any point of interest. This work, indeed, forms for the camp and barracks what Maundrell's 'Treasury of Knowledge' represents in the counting-house; and we cannot doubt that it will obtain corresponding success."—United Service Magazine.

And by Royalty and the Aristocracy of Europe.

ROWLANDS' KALYDOR, an Oriental, Botanical Preparation for Improving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin. It is distinguished for its extremely bland, purifying, and soothing effects on the skin; while, by its action on the pores and minute secretory vessels, it promotes a healthy tone, always every tendency to inflammation, and thus effectually dissipates all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, the softness and delicacy which it induces of the hands and arms, its capability of soothing irritation, and removing cutaneous defects, render it indispensable to every toilet.

It obviates all the effects of Climate on the Skin, whether with reference to cold and indolence, or intense solar heat.

TEETH.

No. 9, LOWER GROSVENOR-STREET, GROSVENOR-SQUARE.

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS

PATENT.—Newly-invented and Patented application of Chemically-prepared WHITE and GUM-COLOURED INDIA-RUBBER in the construction of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELEY, Surgeon-Dentist, No. 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, sole Inventor and Patentee.

A new, original, and invaluable invention, consisting in the adaptation, with the most absolute perfection and success, of chemically prepared White and Gum-coloured India-rubber, as a tissue to the ordinary gold or bone frame. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted in a few of their most prominent features.

All sharp edges are avoided: no springs, wires, or fastenings, are required; a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity, hitherto wholly unattainable; and a fit, perfected with the most unerring accuracy, is secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose, or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums.

The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the chemically prepared India-rubber, and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may with thorough comfort be imbibed and retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being, at the same time, wholly provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

To be obtained only at 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, London; 14, Gay-street, Bath; and 10, Eldon-square, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

PRESERVED IN TINS,

The contents will keep good for any number of years without the Tin imparting any metallic taste to the Preserve, and never mould or ferment. To Regimental Messes they are peculiarly adapted, being more portable than jams, and not liable to breakage. B. M. and Co. would also recommend their Pickles, Sauces, Tart Sausages, &c., and their large stock of York and Cumberland Hams, Cheese, and Bacon.

THE MELTON RIDING BELT.—Important to those who are suffering from Weakness in the Back and General Debility. The following is printed by permission:—

"Sir,—You ask for my opinion of your Melton Riding Belt; I give it. Having resided for a long time in India, my constitution is very much debilitated, and for a long time I was suffering from a weakness in the back and the lower part of the body, which no internal remedy could reach, and the slightest exertion completely overpowered me. I was ordered by my medical man to wear a support, and seeing your advertisement I obtained one of your Melton Riding Belts, which I have worn for the last five months. It gives me great support. I can take riding or other exercise without feeling that extreme lassitude and weariness afterwards. My general health is much improved. You have my best thanks. You will secure my best support.—Yours truly, "Torquay, July 30, 1859. "J. PRATT MATHEWSON.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Calcutta Mail of the 8th of October has arrived before it was strictly due. The news it brings would not, however, have suffered by delay. Owing to the celebration of the great Hindoo holidays, the Doorgah Poojah, business was at a standstill, while the native town was in a constant state of demoniac uproar with the beating of tom-toms and the frantic yells of enthusiastic devotees.

The Governor-general, as we learn by the telegram to Ceylon, started on his visit to the Upper Provinces on the 10th, escorted by an armed force of three thousand men, horse and foot, and accompanied by a swarm of locusts, in the form of twenty thousand followers, who will assuredly eat up every green thing.

Government securities are quoted with an upward tendency, partly, says the Englishman, on account of the favourable reception of the New Indian Loan in London, but also, in some degree, through the hopes excited by the changed tone of the English press with regard to the present misgovernment of India. It may not be irrelevant to draw the attention of our readers to certain proceedings which took place yesterday in the Court of Chancery. The question was mooted, whether Lord St. Leonards' Act, authorising the investment of trust funds in "East India Stock," could apply to the New East Indian Loan, inasmuch as the latter is not guaranteed, and not likely to be guaranteed, by the Imperial Government. The Lord Chancellor was of opinion that "although the new stock is not guaranteed by the Imperial Government, it is India Stock within the meaning of Lord St. Leonards' Act." Lord Justice Knight Bruce, however—with whom Lord Justice Turner concurred—dissented from this view, and thought the Court had not got an accurate knowledge of the state in which the old East India Stock stood; and that, consequently, it would be better for counsel to look into the matter from the fountain head. The question is therefore still undecided. The point of the argument is this: neither Stock is, strictly speaking, guaranteed by the Imperial Government, and yet the old capital stock of the East India Company is so far actually guaranteed that in the year 1874 Parliament may be called upon to pay the holders £200 for every £100 of their stock. A sinking fund, as it were, was inaugurated for the purpose of providing means to pay interest at the rate of ten per cent. on this stock, and with a view to its final liquidation; but if the latter object be not obtained, the country will still be answerable for the repayment of the stock at the stated period.

Rajah Jey Lall Sing has expired his share in the murder of more than twenty British subjects with his own life. Capital punishment was inflicted on him on the 1st October, on the very spot polluted by the blood of his victims. Another rebel, the Rajah of Mittowlie, who sent Captain Orr and his party into Lucknow to be butchered, has passed through Calcutta on his way to the Andamans, for life.

The Calcutta Gazette of the 8th October contains the following appointments consequent upon the Governor-general's departure for the North Western Provinces. Sir James Outram to be President of the Council and Deputy Governor of the fort and garrison of Fort William, during the absence of his Excellency. The following officers will accompany the Governor-general:—Mr. Cecil Beadon, Secretary to Government in the Foreign Department, in charge of all the Civil Departments; Mr. R. Simson, as Under Secretary in all the Civil Departments; Major general R. J. H. Birch, C.B., Secretary to Government in the Military Department, and Major H. M. Wilson, second assistant in the Military Department. Colonel Yule, Secretary to Government in the Public Works Department, will join the camp of the Governor-general on his return from leave.

We are now in a position to give a correct list of the Committees into which the Council of India is about to be divided—one of which was inadvertently omitted in our last number.

BENGAL.

INDIA IN RELATION TO THE ENGLISH COLONIES.

Many people at home have singular ideas and forebodings in connection with the present state of British India, and even the members of the Colonisation Committee have set no very high estimate on India as a field for European skill and enterprise. In one quarter the complaint is that our territory is too wide, that we are unable to provide for the protection of our own districts; in another that the climate is quite unbearable for Europeans; in a third that India is too poor a country to bear for any long period the expenses of its present defence; and that the means of communication between towns and villages are of the most wretched kind. All these complaints have perhaps some foundation more or less solid; but on the other hand there are new and countervailing circumstances, which by a curious perverseness are seldom adverted to. The climate is generally believed to be uniform throughout India, whereas every district between the Himalayan Snows and Cape Comorin may be said to have a climate of its own. India would not be intolerable to Europeans if access to the cooler regions were attended with less difficulties than at present. A railway from Calcutta to Simla, and from Bombay to Agra, with daily trains from each end performing the journey, would enable us to exchange a tropical for an English climate within a couple of days. With such means of transport in full vigour, the English residents in India would cease to be an encampment, and might become colonists. The cost of Indian armies and government is also largely attributed to the same evil of want of rapid means of transit. The wealth of a province is always in process of waste at our leading depots, because it is needful at those places to have at all times an accumulation of munitions and stores equal to the consumption of months, and to the supply of a large circumjacent district.

How far the effect of residence in India is deleterious to the European constitution we shall not pretend to say; but we believe a great deal more blame is thrown on the climate than it deserves. Dr. Ralph Moore, who was examined by the Colonization Committee, stated that "a man from the north, with a blue eye, fair hair, of sanguineous temperament, and of temperate habits, will stand the climate of India remarkably well; and, in fact, many delicate men, who cannot get on in this country, luxuriate and live in India." One's diet and manner of living are the real sources of danger to health in this country.

Considering that India is only one-sixth of the distance, reckoned in time, which it was from the contemporaries of Clive and Hastings, and that she is more conveniently situated with respect to England than the Saxon colonies stretching from the Cape of Good Hope to New Zealand in the one direction, and to the free ports of China in the other, she will ever hold a more important commercial position than they. She is now outflanked, as it were, by the English settlements in South Africa and in Australia. Nothing can be more certain than that the English colonies in Australia and the commerce with those colonies have given to England a firmer hold on India than she ever had before. When our railways shall be completed, valetudinarians from Bengal and Madras will seek in the bracing air of the Himalayas the renovated air they have hitherto sought in England, and sometimes at Auckland and Sydney; and Cape Town will cease to become a sanitarian station from Bombay.

Our colonies are of course of great use to us; no small part of the cavalry of the late East India Company was mounted on sturdy long-tailed horses depastured in New South Wales. But more important still—the fleet of seven or eight hundred ships which annually sail from England with emigrants find it profitable to come home through the Indian seas, and to call at Calcutta for a return cargo. Cost of conveyance has long been a greater bar to the development of Indian commerce than cost of production. These emigrant vessels, we believe, help in a most powerful manner to remove this difficulty, and the result has lately been that the sugars of Benares and Tirhoot have competed vigorously in the English market with the produce of the West India plantations, notwithstanding that Jamaica is only half as distant as the valley of the Ganges and the cultivated plains of the Deccan.

India may not be quite suited for colonists from the labouring classes, but it has not the less a high value, compared with the other colonies. There is now a pretty general belief that an increase of the European population will be an advantage to the country. Wherever European capitalists have gone, they have benefited the people and the country.—Bombay Gazette.

RECLAMATION OF CRIMINAL TRIBES, PUNJAB.

A subject of very considerable importance is at present, we believe, engaging the attention of the authorities. It is nothing more or less than a scheme for the Reclamation of the Criminal Classes in the Punjab. The matter has been mooted by the Deputy-commissioner of Sealkote, Mr. E. A. Prinsep. Our readers are doubtless aware of the existence in this province of criminal races, confederated gangs and guilds. There are first (in the Sealkote district) the "Selaria Rajpoots," near and about Zufferval, of whom there are no less than seven regular gangs, each having its separate sphere of action, line of business, receiver, and branch agencies, having partnerships in the Bar tract and across the Jummoo frontier, which, from its vicinity, forms a ready refuge and convenient market. Lumberdars and Chowdrees of even healthy-looking villages give a helping hand, if they do not actually participate in the spoil. Places of rendezvous are pointed out near the banks of nullahs, in burial-grounds, and road-side "Diarahs." There are said to be even two or three villages of which every inhabitant is a known thief, and every woman experienced in the trade.

Then there are the Sansees, Chooras, and Pukkeewars. The first two of these are found in every district. The Sansees are sheltered in houses assigned to them in villages, where they take one or two acres of land to cultivate, merely as a blind. They fee the Chowkeydars and headmen per month, according to a fixed rate. When hotly pursued they make off four or five miles in any direction, and are sure to find friends ready to take them in and feed them. If let off, and security is wanted, the Lumberdar is only too ready to give it, for the price of security is regulated by a well-known tariff, and thirty rupees are immediately paid down. If hunted down at last, and the Sansee is sent off to jail, the whole brotherhood, or the particular guild, are in honour bound to provide for his wife and children during the entire period he has to remain in confinement.

The Chooras are a less ugly brotherhood, the majority of them being driven to theft and burglary by their poverty.

The Pukkeewars, however, do things on a grand scale. They are a regular guild—highway robberies or heinous burglaries, where a large haul is expected, is their peculiar line of business. They steadily avoid living in one village, preferring scattered residences, with a view to secure concealment and escape.

To bring these lawless bands to order, though highly desirable, is a matter of considerable difficulty. The police have been tried and found wanting. Mr. Prinsep proposes two measures. First, that the landholders should be made responsible for the residence, conduct, and movement of these representatives of a social nuisance. And secondly, that all such vagrants and recorded thieves, who belong to a known criminal race, when let loose from jail after the expiration of their term of imprisonment, should not only be systematically registered, but brought and located on fixed unoccupied tracts of land, such as unowned villages and rukhs or nuzzool land. Mr. Prinsep proposes to give them the land free of rent, subject, however, to the following conditions:—

- 1st. Each family building a residence for itself.
- 2nd. Cultivation of areas of fixed quantity.
- 3rd. Liability to work upon the roads, or do coolies' duty when called upon by Government, subject to receiving wages for the day according to village rates.
- 4th. Attendance of their male children at a school to be formed in each such village.

It is quite clear that provision of this kind would be of more real advantage to society at large, to Government, and the culprits themselves, than the system now pursued, by which these men are prosecuted as Budmashes, and thrown again and again into jail. If the causes of theft be removed, it is natural to suppose that the thefts themselves will not occur. As poverty is in reality the spur by which these unhappy men are driven to crime, so by this scheme they have land and labour given them from which they can produce a livelihood—whilst they will be housed, registered, and watched at the same time.

It is to be hoped, then, that this principle of substituting correctional farms in place of the old system of disposing of vagrants, will be sanctioned. In the measures contemplated we see great hope of effecting a very desirable reform by the removal of a public nuisance. Hitherto our course has been altogether wrong. Instead of removing the inducement and opportunities for committing crime, we have quietly waited until crime has been actually committed; and then, too, if it be a theft or a burglary, deferred investigation until the required party prosecute.—Lahore Chronicle.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HONORARY DECORATIONS.—The Governor General in Council has cancelled the Government general order No. 698, of the 19th May 1859, by which certain authorities were empowered to promote native officers and soldiers, to admit native officers to the order of British India, and to confer the Order of Merit on native officers and soldiers, in cases of distinguished gallantry and exemplary loyalty to the State during the late disturbances; and his Excellency in Council directs that admissions to the Order of British India, and to the Order of Merit in future, shall only be made in strict accordance with the regulations of those orders respectively.

SONTALH PERGUNNAHS, 12th Sept.—It is now some time since I said anything about the mining (coal) resources of this part of the country, and as what follows may be of interest to the Ganges steam companies, I will defer it no longer. There is no need of my giving any description of the mines, for there are quite enough collieries at work just now, nor do I think it necessary to say anything further on the quality of the coal, than that the same description of steam coal can be sent down as is supplied from Raneeunge. My object is to point out to steam companies the advantages the steam navigation of the Ganges will gain from these mines being opened up to commerce, and an easy means of transit being afforded to and from them. I must describe the position of the mines. They are situated about twenty-four miles from the railway, and a little more than thirty miles from the Ganges. A line of railway running from Sreecoond (below Rajmahal) to the Damuhi valley (twenty-four short miles), and another line starting from near Peerpointe to near Simra Bungla (not much over twenty-four miles), would reach both ends of the coal field. These two lines could be united, passing through between thirty and forty miles of coal country, besides being within easy reach of mines not now reckoned upon, on both sides of this route. Here we have coal that can be brought down, by a branch line of less than twenty-four miles, to the railway, and for eight miles more, or about thirty to thirty-two miles, to the Ganges. Now as this line would be only one-fourth of the distance from Raneeunge to Calcutta it is possible to lay down coal above and below Rajmahal for one-fourth the money it costs to convey it from Raneeunge to Calcutta. We will suppose it costs three 3 annas per maund to convey Raneeunge coal to Calcutta. Well, by rail it ought to cost only 3 pice per maund to lay coal down on the banks of the Ganges, near Rajmahal, or allowing 4 pice per maund, then for the remaining 2 annas per maund this coal could be boated to Calcutta to compete with Raneeunge coal. It could be sent to Dacca, and would there cut Raneeunge out of the market, for it would cost as much to send coal from Calcutta to Dacca, as from Rajmahal to Dacca, which would still give this place an advantage of 2 annas on the maund. Then there is the freight up the Ganges, which must be more than the freight down country. My object in pointing out these advantages is to call the attention of those concerned to the great advantages commerce would derive from a branch line of railway to the Rajmahal coal-mines. Coal might be sold near Rajmahal, on the Ganges, at from 2½ to 3 annas per maund, while to lay down coal at Rajmahal from Raneeunge would cost 6 or 7 annas, at a low estimate. 3 to 4 annas per maund is a considerable saving, and would reduce the item of fuel to less than one-half its present cost. I may mention here that if a line were to start from the Ganges to the coal-mines, it would pass through Damuni valley. It would pass over a country which is perfectly flat, eighteen miles from the Ganges the Guitayree pass is crossed. It may be forty feet in height, and 1,000 feet in length. For about 400 or 500 feet on each side of the road, high hills rise to about 1,000 feet. After passing this pass other coal-mines can be entered by running over a perfectly level country. This would make the line a couple of miles longer. By entering the coal-field at once, a cutting of not less than 60 feet in depth and 400 feet in length would have to be made in soft sandstone work at a cost of Rs. 10 per 1,000 feet. From the above will be seen the advantages the steam companies may gain by a railway up the Goomanee, and I would advise them to use their interests to push on a railway through this part of the country. A railway has been talked of, but there is no knowing when it will be started. The East Indian Railway Company will save Rs. 18,000 on every lac of maunds in the difference of freight between cart-delivered and rail-delivered coal on all the coal that they may use. It is to their interest to have this line completed. It would be impossible to procure carts to send down the coal required. The cost of a line up here would not be 20 lacs of rupees, and I think if many new steam companies are to start, a second railway company would find it pay them to make a line out to these mines.—Hurkaru.

CHRISTIAN VERNACULAR SOCIETY.—From the First Annual Report of the Christian Vernacular Society for India we see that it raised a sum of £1,720 during the year 1858, of which £113 was paid in subscriptions, and the rest in donations. During this year £1,788 has been raised, of which £955 was collected in various churches on the late Day of Thanksgiving in England. The society remitted a sum of £50 to the Church Mission at Bhagulpore for the education of six Sonthal teachers, and a similar sum to the Calcutta Female Normal School. It has set apart £500 for the publication of school books, £60 for the engraving of scripture maps, and £500 for the preparation and passage of four well-trained schoolmasters. The society are prepared to pay for the maintenance of vernacular students in various schools and colleges belonging to different missionary bodies in Benares, Agra, Umritsur, Loodiana, Ahmednugger, Serampore, Santipore, Cuttack, Mysore, Mangalore, Vizagapatam, Jaffna, Madras, Palamcottah, and Cotta, provided the training department be under a competent vernacular training master, and comprise a practising school under efficient vernacular management. These students, after completing their course, may join any missionary society, or establish schools of their own.

PUNJAB MEDICAL COLLEGE.—The Civil Surgeon of Lahore has published a prospectus of the Medical College to be established in the Punjab, lately sanctioned by Lord Stanley at an expense of Rs. 2,000 a month. The staff will embrace a Principal, Professor of Medicine, Professor of Surgery, Professor of Chemistry, Assistant Demonstrator, Superintendent of Hindoostanee Class, Resident House Surgeon, and Apothecary. The students will be separated into two distinct classes, the first for Sub-Assistant Surgeons, for which candidates must not be under 16 years of age, and must pass an examination in English. Their period of study will extend to five years, and scholarships will be contended for at a public examination. The second class will consist of students intended for native doctors, who must be natives of the Punjab, and will study for three years. The men whom the Calcutta and Agra medical schools turn out are physically unfit for the Punjab. These schools can provide for the wants of their own provinces only.

THE FIRST STEP.—The Englishman says the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal has directed the collectors of Rungpore, Dinagepore, Backergunge, Dacca, Nuddea, Jessore, and Purnea, to purchase at par all Bank of Bengal post bills that may be presented for the purpose, to the extent of the available surplus in their treasuries. The expense of remitting such surplus in cash to Calcutta or other treasures in want of cash, will thus be saved. It has taken officials a century to make this slight approach to the use of a paper currency.

TRADES' INSTITUTION.—The Hurkaru publishes a plan for a library and reading-room in connection with the Calcutta Trades' Association, to be called the Trades' Institution. It will also afford facilities for the discussion of public questions and the delivery of public lectures. The Governor-general has subscribed Rs. 200, and twenty trading firms Rs. 100 each. The scheme is a good one, and likely to succeed. The object might be extended so as to provide a place of meeting for the numerous young men connected with the mercantile and trading interests of Calcutta, and ultimately form the nucleus of a Middle Class Club.

THE "ARRACAN," the largest sea-going vessel ever built in Calcutta, was launched on the 28th September from the Kidderpore Dockyard, in the presence of the Lieutenant-governor and a large party. The band of H.M.'s 99th was in attendance, and a tiffin and dance succeeded the launch. The vessel is of teak. Her length is 227 feet, breadth 30 feet 4 inches, and tonnage 1,100 register. She is to be employed as a transport steamer.

PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.—Civilisation is extending to Mecca. A "Pocket Companion" for Pilgrims, at one rupee a copy, is thus advertised in the Urdu Guide: "A useful work called the 'Tohfatooh Hauj,' containing a detailed description of the injunctions prescribed for pilgrimage to Mecca, Medina, and other holy places, compiled in easy Persian by Mohamud Abdoor Rowoof, is now in the press."

THE SONTALS.—A correspondent of the Phoenix says, the Sontals believe the proclamation has declared that caste is not to be meddled with, and they may punish witches and wizards according to their own law. Accordingly some women were recently put to death as reputed witches. A relative of the Manjee of a village had a child who died after some months' sickness. By heating oil in water the father discovered that three families had a hand in destroying his child by witchcraft. He laid the charge before two of the regularly paid Pergunnites, Government servants, who decided that those of the accused who had answered their summons must be banished the village. The accused who did not appear were stripped of their property, and their standing crops left to rot. The matter is now before the assistant commissioner at Rajmahal.

RAJAH RADAKHANT DEB BAHADOOR of Shoba Bazaar, Calcutta, has received a Gold Medal from Her Majesty the Queen for his Sanskrit scholarship.

COLONEL NORMAN, C.B., the Adjutant-general of the Bengal army, has been ordered to England, via the Cape, for his health. His share in the late campaign and his services to the Government have yet to be recorded. Colonel Norman has for years been the soul of the staff, has been promoted by four Commanders in Chief, has been engaged in sixty-three battles and skirmishes, is Lieutenant-colonel in India, C.B., and Adjutant-general, and is still a regimental lieutenant.

MILE TONNERS!—The Englishman mentions the launch of a screw steam-ship, the Thunder, fitted up for seventy-five first-class passengers, to compete with the P. and O. Company on the line between Calcutta and Suez.

UNPROFITABLE PROFITS.—At the half-yearly meeting of the Calcutta Steam Tug Association, the Directors reported Rs. 38,070 as the profit of their four steamers for six months, but in consequence of the foundering of the Canning, which they expect to be able to raise, and the repairs of the Forbes, they recommended no dividend.

Exports (Calcutta, Oct. 8).—We have to report a very languid business. Holders continue their high demands, which are generally above home rates, and transactions are, therefore, confined to the actual wants of vessels in the harbour. It is expected that during the approaching holidays there will be a large accumulation of produce in the bazaar, which will perhaps lead to a general decline, and induce shippers to come forward.

Imports (Calcutta, Oct. 8).—Almost all kinds of imports remain in the same dullness mentioned in the last report. Piece Goods and Yarns of all kinds and descriptions remain in their former position as far as the consumption is concerned, and prices, generally speaking, have sustained again a partial decline. The future prospects of the market are still unfavourable, and the prospects generally are not encouraging. The accumulated and daily accumulating stocks of sold and unsold goods lie heavily on the market. The Metal market is in the same languid state, and there is no change in quotations.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FAMINE IN COCHIN.—The scarcity which has lately prevailed in Cochin has brought cholera in its train. Unable to purchase rice at the present high rate, the poor are driven to live on unwholesome vegetables and Poonack, which resembles the oil cake so largely used in England for feeding cattle. This cake is formed in making coconut oil. In Ceylon it is used to manure the coffee soil, and in Cochin ordinarily to feed poultry. The Europeans of Cochin have raised a subscription to avert the horrors of famine. The Cochin Courier mentions the case of one large landed proprietor, and a man of ample fortune, who has in his stores two years' produce of his extensive fields; yet no consideration of humanity can induce him to bring his supplies to the markets to be sold even at a high remunerative price, although numbers are dying around him through the effects of the prevailing scarcity. At Alleppey, Hajee Jacob, and other native merchants, during a recent scarcity, sold their stores of rice at reduced rates. The new crop will soon be in the market and restore it to its natural condition.

SUICIDE.—The Madras Spectator of 17th September records the death by his own hand of Mr. Michel Honore Guyot, merchant, and brother to the senior merchant of the firm of Guyot and Company, of Madras. At the inquest which sat on the body a verdict was returned that the deceased shot himself whilst in a state of temporary insanity. Mr. Guyot, it appears, had not been successful lately in business, and had fallen into a state of despondency from which he never rallied. A feeling appeared to be strong in his mind that do what he might he would never prosper.

THE COMPETITIVE SYSTEM.—At the Uncovenanted Service examination held throughout the Madras Presidency on the 16th of May last, and five following days, out of 903 candidates, 439 passed; and of these 34 by the first standard. The Tinnevely men were most successful, and the Northern Circars backward. The answers in Euclid and Algebra were indifferent; in Arithmetic tolerably successful; in History and Geography "low;" in Law "below par." The questions are not given, but the examiners doubt the expediency of giving to lower candidates so difficult a test as that of drafting a docket to a letter or report. The number who passed is double that of the previous examination. Of the 439, 160 are from Government schools, 71 from Mission schools receiving Grants-in-Aid or otherwise of known character, and 208 from other schools, or entered as having received a private education. The Government consider this result to be "honourable to the Presidency, and encouraging to those who have its progress in civilisation and good government at heart."

MADRAS RAILWAY.—Seventeen miles of the Madras Railway, in the Malabar district, were opened on the 5th September. In a few weeks, it will be opened to the Palghat station. The natives crowded to see the trial trip of the "smoke bandy," which travelled at the rate of thirty miles an hour. The women signified their reverence by salaaming to it, and many of the men strove hard to keep up with it. New signal-men had been drilled to their work, and placed at every mile of the line, but several of them, on the approach of the engine, threw their signal-flags on the ground and took to their heels.

QUESTION AND ANSWER.—At the recent Uncovenanted Service examination one of the questions proposed for the "first standard," is as follows:—"Travelling from Bombay to Calcutta as the crow flies, . . . what languages would you hear spoken, and what is the chief object of cultivation in each district?" Numbers of natives, as we have since learnt, did not understand the meaning of the expression "as the crow flies," since their personal observations of that bird had not led them to the conclusion that it winged its way in a more direct line than any other members of the feathered race. On its conventional English meaning being explained to one of them after the examination, he put this question, which we refer to the examiner for reply. "How could he hear any language if he were up in the air like a crow?" The chief object of cultivation in each and every district, he assumed, was for the cultivators to obtain a livelihood!

DISSENTIENT UNANIMITY.—We find in the published proceedings of the Madras Government on the question of Village Revenue Establishments, another instance of the uselessness of the Presidency Councils, where there is a strong governor. Sir Charles Trevelyan had drawn up certain rules to provide that "when service lands have been diverted from their proper object, they shall be restored to that object; and that when they exceed what is required for the payment of the services, the excess shall be subject only to half of the usual assessment, provided it had been held as Inam land for fifty years." Mr. Morehead's minute is unintelligible, and Mr. Elliot, in recording his dissent from certain of the proposed rules, says:—"I do so only pro forma, without seeking to delay the orders being acted upon."

BALASORE.—The magistrate and civil surgeon of Balasore made a second expedition to the Meghassani Hill, forty miles west of Balasore, in the first week of April last. The elevation of the hill is 3,700 feet, and the plateau on every side extends for forty miles in length, and ten or twelve in breadth. The whole range corresponds very nearly to the Neilgherries in formation and soil. The mean temperature is, however, 13.66 degrees hotter than that of Ootacamund, while it is 13.2 degrees lower than that of Calcutta—thus holding a medium position between these two stations. Most of the servants who were attached to the expedition suffered from fever. The magistrate recommends the hill and plateau as admirably suited for recruits on their arrival from England, who, if a road were constructed, and a steamer waiting for them at the mouth of the Balasore River, could be conveyed to Calcutta within forty-eight hours. The surgeon, Dr. Kendall, considers the country as admirably adapted for coffee plantations. The Lieutenant-governor of Bengal is of opinion that, with Parinath Hill, eight hundred feet higher, much more easily accessible, and free from all suspicion of fever, to make Meghassani a depot for European troops would be a waste of money. But eventually coffee-planters may turn their attention to it.

DR. CLEGHORN has furnished a memorandum to Government on the introduction of quinine-yielding Chincona trees of America into the Madras Presidency. All the information requisite to give the experiment a fair start is supplied. In attempting to give an opinion on the probability of naturalising these Chinconas of America in Southern India, says Dr. Cleghorn, it is necessary to compare the indigenous flora and the atmospheric relation of the two countries. It was from the resemblance in the vegetable productions of China and the North-West Provinces of India that Dr. Royle recommended the cultivation of tea in the Himalayas, and upon the same principle Mr. Griffiths argued in favour of a trial in Assam. The result in both cases has been eminently successful. The resemblance of the flora of the Neilgherries to that of tropical America in a corresponding latitude, says Dr. Cleghorn, is striking. Dr. Wright computed the number of species of the Cinchonaceae in the neighbourhood of Ootacamund to be thirty-eight. Cinchonide flourish on the Neilgherries. Dr. Cleghorn accordingly recommends the higher ranges of the Western Ghats (especially the Neilgherries, Annamally, Pulney, and Travancore Hills), as presenting the most promising situations in southern, or perhaps indeed in all India, for growing the tree. The memorandum will be forwarded to the Secretary of State for India with reference to his despatch of the 9th June last on the same subject.

quires, they could be soothed with favour, and the sacred Son of Heaven, secure against the four barbarian races, his defences of a strength to endure for ever, for ten thousand ages would be free from harm. Only let him not (or, he would never) see committed the error of Káu-tung of the Sung Dynasty, who divided the north from the south (A.D. 1150). When Wu Hau (in the time of the Three States) crossed the Lu in the summer, the southern Mwan did not rebel. As to the insignificant wretches at the Kinling (Nanking) they are hemmed in by Chang Kwong-liang, Ho Kwei-tsing, and Shingpau. A mere sore on the surface is not worth much anxiety.

"Your servant prostrate looks for your Sacred Majesty's decision; should you deign to accept his humble proposals he will be immeasurably grateful. Sobbing as though he were choked with blood, he presents his memorial."

The only local matter of any consequence has been the trial of Mr. Tarrant, editor of the Friend of China, for a series of libels of Lieut. colonel Caine, similar to those on the same subject to which the attention of the English public has been called by Mr. Chisholm Anstey. The result was that Mr. Tarrant was found guilty, and condemned to a year's imprisonment in the common gaol. The trial was presided over by the new acting chief justice, Mr. Adams; the jury were men of the highest respectability, several of them being heads of mercantile houses, and they made an addition to their verdict, declaring that Mr. Tarrant had failed to connect Colonel Caine's name in even the slightest degree with the charges of corruption brought against him. Timidity in dealing with exaggeration and slander has been one great cause of the unfortunate state into which matters have fallen here, and it is now to be hoped that we have entered on a new era.—Overland China Mail.

TWO CHARACTERISTIC MEMORIALS appeared in the Pekin Gazette of 22nd July. One from Hang-fuh asks the Emperor to reward the officials and gentry who subscribed towards the construction of the Ta-ku works and the maintenance of the garrison. Seventeen civilians are named who subscribed 16,800 taels in all. One feasted the troops, and all behaved handsomely, for "though the capital of his Majesty's subjects has a limit, their devotion is without bounds." The other memorial states that prayers had been offered by more than a million of people for rain, that on the 17th June rain fell, and asks that the prohibition against a theatrical performance in honour of the gods on such an occasion be withdrawn. The Emperor objects to the people assembling in large crowds, and hence the prohibition.

DESTRUCTIVE GALES.—There have been several severe gales in the Chinese seas, which have occasioned great loss and damage to the shipping. The steamer Thebes was wrecked on the 30th August, on a sunken rock "about four miles to seaward, from a bluff point fourteen miles north of False Tenosa." No lives were lost. About the same time the British ship Duncan was abandoned near Hainan. Four Chinese and Malays were drowned. The ship Glendarah, on the 18th August, went down in lat. 24 N., and lon. 114 E. All hands saved by the Lady Raglan. The barque Lina was driven on shore on the 29th of the same month near Swatow, and in a few minutes went to pieces. The captain, mate, one man, and three Chinamen, managed to reach the shore; all the rest were drowned. The Confucius was also lost off Swatow.

CEYLON.

COLOMBO, October 15.—The railway discussion has a good deal subsided, and the Legislative Council has under consideration at present matters referring to the Savings' Bank—the improvement of our small cause courts, and an ordinance to protect "Inventions" that may be made.—The discussion on the Railway Bill gave rise to a correspondence between its chief engineer, Mr. Doyne, and Mr. Rust, a member of the Legislative Council, in which Mr. Rust, in a dignified manner, vindicated his privileges as a member of council, whilst he disclaimed all personalities. —Mr. Doyne has lately suffered much from indisposition, and his friends are therefore willing to overlook some loss of temper on his part.

A scarcity of labour is generally felt. The Manchester bringing coolies, compared with our requirements, in very limited number, from the opposite coast. In order to offer additional inducement for coolies to migrate to Ceylon, it was recommended in certain quarters to reduce the rate of passage money to sixpence per head. The Immigrant Labour Commissioners have sought the views of the Planters' Association, and the latter body considered the contemplated reduction as impolitic. Mr. Gray, of Tuticoreen, observes that the condition of the coolies in their native villages is better now than it was formerly—that wages in India are higher, the taxes have been reduced, cultivation is more extensive, and from the enhanced value of the productions, cultivators can afford to pay higher wages in India. To these several causes that gentleman ascribes the reluctance that is felt at present by coolies to come over to Ceylon.

Our obituary records the death of Mr. Butler, the inventor of the pulping machine—who sank under an attack of dysentery—and of Mr. Kilby, who died from acute diarrhoea.

The Supreme Court has affirmed the decision of the Commissioner of the Court of Requests in the case of the servants of St. Thomas' College, against the Rev. Mr. Baly, the warden.—The decision makes Mr. Baly liable for their wages.

The District Court has granted a first-class certificate to Mr. Robert Dawson, late of the firm of Dawson, Dickson and Co., and at present secretary of the Cooly Immigration.—The Queen's advocate appeared for Mr. Dawson, and no creditors opposed the certificate.

The appointment of Mr. Wright, a young civilian, to the judgeship of such an important district as Madura, has given universal dissatisfaction.

The weather during the fortnight has been variable—fever and dysentery prevail among the native community to some extent.

Three ships have sailed since the departure of last mail. Export of coffee for the last fortnight has been, of plantation kind, 10,991, native, 4,350, making a total of cwt. 15,341; out of these 9,729 plantation, and 3,528 native have gone to London, and 1,262 plantation, and 823 native to Amsterdam.—Ceylon Overland Observer.

JAVA.—The Singapore Free Press gives some statistics of the trade of Java. In 1858 its value amounted to $11,747,414, or $2,258,538 more than that of Singapore, and less than that of the whole Straits Settlements by $1,682,738. The population of Java and Madura is upwards of ten millions, that of the Straits Settlements not much more than a quarter of a million. The chief articles of produce were indigo, coffee, rattans, rice, spices, sugar, tobacco, and tin. The ships which arrived in 1858 amounted altogether to 2,882, with a tonnage of 222,900 lasts, or 445,800 tons. The number of ships which left Java and Madura in 1858 was 3,344, with a tonnage of 237,776 lasts, or 475,552 tons.

PERSIA.—The following notification, dated the 9th June, issued by the Political Resident at Bushire, Persian Gulf, has been published by the Bombay government:—"The governor of the Persian port of Bushire having officially intimated to me that all British subjects trading with Persia should register their commercial bonds or receipts in the public offices of registration in Persia, it is hereby recommended that all British subjects and proteges trading with Persia follow this course in all commercial transactions where paper is passed between themselves and the subjects of his Majesty the Shah. This is with the view to give the holders of stamped paper a priority of admission in claims against a bankrupt's estate. 2. The fee charged by the local authorities for registering and sealing documents with the Seal of the Lion and Sun is uniform, being two Mahomed Shah krans per stamp, without reference to the amount named therein."

Capture of Rathghur.

No. 1,336 of 1859.—H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following extract of a letter from the offg. adjt. gen. of the army, No. 1,094 of the 18th ult., and reports from Maj. gen. Sir Hugh Rose, G.C.B., late Comdg. C.I.F.F., of the capture of Rathghur and of the action at Barodia.

H.E. in Council, in notifying his entire concurrence in the opinion expressed by the Rt. Hon. the C. in C., desires to record his high approval of the manner in which these operations were directed. H.E. in Council offers his cordial thanks to Maj. gen. Sir Hugh Rose, and to all the officers and men employed on these occasions, and regrets that the miscarriage of the reports of these operations should have delayed the public notice of them.

Extract of a letter from the offg. adjt. gen. of the army to the secy. to the govt. of India, mil. depart., No. 1,094, dated 18th of August, 1859.

In continuation of my letter, No. 389, of the 20th of May last, I am now directed to append for submission to the H.E. the Gov. gen. in council, the accompanying despatch, No. 1,204 A, dated 29th of June of the present year, from Maj. gen. Sir Hugh Rose, G.C.B., late comdg. C. I. F. F., giving cover to copies of his reports of the capture of Rathghur and action of Barodia.

With reference to the operations described in the despatches now forwarded, his lordship desires me to observe that they reflect the highest credit upon the commander and the troops engaged, and are characterized by that complete success which marked the whole of Sir Hugh Rose's campaign in Central India.

From Maj. gen. Sir Hugh Rose, K.C.B., Com. C.I.F.F. to the Adj. gen. of the Army.

H. Q. Bombay, camp Saugor,
7th Feb. 1859.

SIR,—My report of the 31st ult. will have informed you, for the information of H. E. the C. in C., that the rebels had determined to defend the fort of Rathghur, in order to prevent my force from relieving Saugor, and putting down rebellion in the Saugor and Bundelcund districts.

As I approached Rathghur, I received information of the assemblage of rebels at Odepore, in Scindia's country, and in my front; in order to insure the safety of the siege train, which was a day's march in the rear, and not to lose time, I brought it up by a night march to my force, and adopted precautions against surprise.

In going through a pass over a range of hills, five miles from Rathghur, the officer commanding the leading flankers, embarrassed by the thick jungle, took by mistake the right instead of the left road, as ordered, and crossing, in consequence, the river Beena by the upper, the wrong ford, got into a skirmish with the rebels posted in the suburbs of Rathghur. I had just arrived with the advanced guard at the encamping ground; to extricate the flankers from a position so unfavourable to cavalry, I advanced and covered with the infantry guns and supports their return to their proper position. In rectifying this mistake, I had gained a good deal of ground to the right front, and a company of the 24th N. I. had taken with spirit one or two houses and gardens; on reconnoitring, I found that they were the commencement of the suburbs, and that to keep all this would compromise my right and plan of attacking the fort from the left flank. I therefore ordered the troops back to their camp.

The next day I made with Maj. Boileau, comdg. engr., and a small party of the 3rd Eur. and 3rd Lt. Cav., under Capt. Forbes, a complete reconnoissance of eighteen miles of the whole country round the rock of Rathghur.

I ascertained that the rock,  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile in length, covered and surrounded with thick jungle, slopes from the west, where it is precipitous, to the east, where it is accessible. The north front of the fort was the only one which was habited; the other fronts were merely fortifications. The river Beena runs under its west face.

The reconnoissance confirmed in all essentials the information on which I had formed my plan of attack. I carried it out, by investing the same evening the rock of Rathghur as closely as the great extent, hills, thick jungle, and a difficult river would allow me. But it is impossible, unless with a very much larger force than my own, to invest completely such ground, because a great part of it is dense jungle, which, hiding all view of the enemy's motions, enable him, by a feint, to concentrate videttes and pickets on one point, and then pass through the vacuum.

Sir Robert Hamilton had the goodness to place at my disposal 600 or 700 troops of all arms of the regt. of Bhopal; and I had requested their commander to invest the S.W. of the fort, as being nearest to their country, and to take the village of Pattan, which they did with alacrity, after firing a few shots.

The next day, as soon as the officers comdg. the art. and engineers had reported that they were ready for the siege, I attacked the fort from the left at the S.W. end of the rock, under cover of a feint from the right against the town, from which all possible advantage was to be derived.

Both succeeded.

Leaving a troop of the 3rd Lt. cav. at the foot of the slope to cover our rear, accompanied by Capt. Forbes, comdg. the 3rd Lt. cav., who is always as zealous as he is useful, I mounted, with the troops in the margin,* under the command of Lieut. col. Liddell, the slope, two companies of the 3rd Europeans skirmishing and covering the breadth of rock, two companies supporting, and the rest in reserve, we made our way through thick jungle, and reached, without being discovered, the edge of the open ground in front of the east curtain of the fort, which Maj. Boileau had selected for the breaching batteries.

I directed a road to be cut immediately by the sappers and miners from the foot of the slope to this battery; our left to open a communication down the south of the rock with the trp. of the 3rd cav., investing the south of the rock, our right to open a communication down the north side of the rock with the camp, and rifle pits to be made at night in front of our attack, enfilading, as much as possible, the enemy's line of defences.

The enemy, having perceived our position, commenced rather a sharp fire on it from their jinjals, and small guns in the curtain and bastions, which I kept down with the fire of the 6-pdr. of the Hyderabad contingent, and the  $5\frac{1}{2}$  mortars, the former firing at the loopholes and embrasures, the latter with half charges dropping their shells on the bannette. I beg to mention, for his devotion on this occasion, Gr. Mr. Thompson, comdg. a half batt. of the art. of the Hyderabad contingent, who has completed thirty-two years of meritorious service. Twice hit, he continued to fight his guns successfully to the close of the day. I thanked his battery on the ground.

The two 18-pdrs., with elephant draught, were brought up the hill at 4 p.m.; the 3rd Europeans dragging them up the steep where the elephants could not go.

The feint against the town drove the enemy out of it into the fort, and enabled Brigdr. Stuart, with the force in the margin,† to take possession of the Eedgha, a Mussulman place of prayer, opposite the north face commanding the town, and within range of the main gate of the fort, on this height, and another to the left, he skillfully placed Capt. Lightfoot's 9-pdr. batt., one 8-inch howtzn. and two 8-inch mortars. These batteries forming the right or town attack kept up, night and day, an effective fire on the line of defences and buildings of the fort.

On the 27th inst. I changed the 8-inch howtzn. from the right to the left attack, in order to enfilade with its fire the defences and palaces of the north face.

I was constantly between the two attacks, which were two and a half miles apart.

From the town attack I directed a detach. of the 3rd Eur., supported by another of the 24th N. I., with two comp. of the 24th N. I. in reserve, and under cover of houses and trees, and of a heavy fire from the Eedgha battery, to take a low massive tower close to the main gate, Capt. Lightfoot being of opinion that a howitzer might be placed in it which would batter the gate, and strengthen and shorten the cordon of investment. I had a couple of 8-inch shells thrown into the tower, to drive out the enemy should they be there, when the storming party, gallantly led by Capt. Lightfoot, who volunteered to accompany it, for which I beg to recommend him to H.E., entered the tower under a heavy fire from the walls by the postern opposite the walls, from which it was only fifty yards distant. Capt. Lightfoot recommends Private Davies, of the 3rd Eur., for his gallantry and intelligence on this occasion.

Capt. Lightfoot and Lieut. Bonus, of the Engrs., having, after a thorough examination of the tower, reported the massive construction and nature of its defences prevented their being used for the offensive, I withdrew the troops from it before daylight.

On the 28th inst. at 8, the sand-bag batteries of the left attack having been completed, the two 18-pdrs. and the 8-inch howtzn. having been brought off to them, commenced their fire against the outer wall of the east curtain of the fort with such good effect that it was evident that a practicable breach would be soon made.

I had just returned to the camp from the batt., when the rebels, coming in force out of the thick jungle, crossed the River Beena and attacked the pickets of the right rear of the camp; another large body of them appeared at the same time on the opposite bank, the two bodies amounting to 1,500 or 2,000 men, many of them sepoys and valaitees.

I moved rapidly with the outlying picket of H. M.'s 14th Lt. drags., who in less than a minute were in their saddles against the rebels, ordering two guns, and the rest of the picket, to follow in support. The enemy, who were skirmishing with a picket of the 3rd Lt. cav., on seeing our approach, fired a discharge of muskets and rockets at us, and ran into a gorge of the Beena and up its rocky banks. I directed Capt. Hare, following in my rear, to move by a short line, and cut off their retreat.

Brigdr. Stuart, whom I called up, advancing from the Eedgha with a few rounds of arty. sent the rebels on the other side of the river into the jungle, and the whole retreated rapidly to a precipitous ridge above the village of Chunderapore, four miles to the N.W. of Rathghur, from whence they had started in the morning.

Capt. Hare came up with the rear of the rebels before they reached the ridge, and cut up several of them.

Capt. Hare and Lieut. Westwacott, attached to the Hyderabad cav., did good service on this occasion, and Lieut. Moore, of the 3rd By. Lt. cav., who, on account of the artillerymen, served a gun with good effect, deserves also to be mentioned.

After night fall the rebels made a feeble and unsuccessful attack on the left of the camp from the Saugor Road. The rebels, who had come from their fortified Camp Norconlee, and from the Fort of Kooreye, failed completely in their attempt to surprise the camp and relieve Rathghur. During the whole time of their attack the breaching batteries continued their fire. Col. Turnbull reported that the breach would be practicable for an assault the next day at sunset.

Accounts now came into me that the rebels from the Chunderapore ridge had, early in the morning, attacked in the difficult pass mentioned in the first part of this report, a convoy of supplies coming for my force from the West, and had killed Scindia's vakeel, who was in charge of it.

The safety of my supplies rendered it necessary that the enemy should be driven from * Lieut. col. Liddell, comdg. 3rd By. Eur. regt., detach. of siege train under Lieut. Mallock, two 18-pdr., 16 men By. art.; two 5-inch mortars, 10 men By. art.; 90 Madras sappers and miners, two 6-pdr. guns art.; Hyderabad contingent—1 trp. 3rd Lt. cav. under Capt. Forbes.

† 4 6-pdr. guns, By. H.A., 6 9-pdr. guns, By. Lt. f. batt. under Capt. Lightfoot, 50 By. sappers and miners, detach. of siege train; 2 8-in. mortars, 1 8-inch howtzn, 26 men By. art.; all the art. under Lieut. col. Turnbull; 2 trps. of H.M.'s 14th Lt. drags., under Maj. Scudmore, 24th N.I.

Chunderapore during night. I was employed in making arrangement for attacking them, which was not easy, as my force was already engaged in an operation for which, in former times, a force of four times their strength was considered necessary. However, I was on the point of marching against Chunderapore, when two spies I had sent out during the night came in and reported that the enemy had left that place for Barodia.

On visiting the Eedgha Brigdr. Steuart reported to me that about four o'clock A.M. the enemy had attempted to make a sortie from the main gate, which he had driven back with Capt. Lightfoot's 9-pounder. A Bhopall officer came up and reported that he had cut up twenty-five out of fifty of the garrison, who had attempted to force their way by his patrol. Col. Liddell reported also at the same time that, judging from the stillness in the fort that its garrison were escaping, he had entered it by the incomplete breach with part of the 3rd Europeans, who after receiving some shots from the few rebels still there had killed them and taken possession of the fort. The main body fled by an ancient sally port and a hole dug under the parapet to the S.W., from which when I entered the fort the ropes were hanging by which they had let themselves down. The reports of all the officers on duty state that these rebels crossing a ford over the Beena to the S.W., under the Bhopall Camp, passed through the Bhopall lines into the jungle; the Bhopal troops fired a few shots at the fugitives; two or three of their dead baggage animals in this ford showed the track they had taken. The Bhopal troops have been, and are still, so useful to me, that I merely mention this circumstance, which is nothing out of the way amongst oriental troops, out of justice to my own force.

The garrison, stated to be 400 or 500 in number fled, although many of them were warlike Valaitees and Pathans, despite of their determination that they would hold Rathghur or die, not being able to stand the shelling, or meet the approaching assault. I am glad to say that the investment of the rock prevented the escape, and caused the capture of most of the chief rebels and of many of the rest. Mahomed Fazil Khan, a relation of the Regent of Bhopal, and the military chief of the rebels in these districts, and all his staff, such as they were, attempted to cross the Beena, but seeing the videttes of H. M.'s 14th Lt. drags. on the other bank, turned back and hid themselves in a cave under the rock, where they were captured. The videttes and pickets round the rock, those of Bhopall included, cut down and took many of the fugitive garrison during the day. I made over eighty prisoners to Sir Robert Hamilton, of whom twenty-four were executed, and forty-eight more to the civil authorities.

Of the cav. sent in pursuit of the fugitives, the Hyderabad Irr. came up with and killed forty of them, this being exclusive of the twenty-five killed by the Bhopall troops. Lieut. Westwacott, on this occasion again distinguished himself.

At sunset Mahomed Fazil Khan and the Nawab Kamdar Khan, a pensioner of the British Government and a son of the great Pindaree Chief, taken by Sir John Malcolm, were hung over the gate of the fort, in presence of detachments of my force. The next day seventeen more, most of them rebels of note, and all part of the garrison of Rathghur, were executed; two of them, brothers of the Pindaree Chief, had taken part in the murder of the British Assistant at Bereiseeh; Kishen Ram, a Secretary of Mahomed Fazil Khan, is stated to have been instrumental in atrocities committed on forty Christians; Wal lided Khan, who admitted on his trial "that he had done all he could, and three times urged Fazil Mahomed to go down sword in hand and attack the camp," a valaitee leader, &c.

The Shazadah of Mundesore was not in the fort, as was proved by an unopened letter from the Rajah of Banpoor to his address, found in the fort by an officer of the 3rd Eur. He had left it the day of our arrival. In this letter, which is curious, the Rajah gives him the title of "King," and deprecates that many native chiefs do not venerate his kingly authority as they ought to do, but have the bad taste to prefer the rule of the "Kafir and infidels."

The fort was provided with a fine tank, cut out of the rock, fifty feet deep; and in it were found great stores of salt and grain, sufficient for a year's consumption; a few camels, cattle, and several horses, two of them belonging to Mahomed Fazil Khan, one with a silver bridle, and another to the Shazadah of Mundesore, a mould for casting cannon and shot, and an immense mass of native correspondence and English accounts, which I made over to Sir Robert Hamilton. One object was also found which excited indignation, the effigy of the head of a decapitated European female, which it appears these supporters of a change of rule in India carried before their troops, as fitting emblems of their deeds. Notwithstanding this, and all that has passed, far worse than this, the 3rd Europeans when they entered the fort treated the women and numerous children of the rebels who were left there with the humanity which was to be expected from their discipline and their faith. I had enjoined the troops, for the honour of their country and the army, not to harm a woman or a child.

I beg to bring to H.E.'s favourable consideration the zealous and able support which I have received before Rathghur from Brigdr. Steuart, Lieut.-col. Turnbull, comdg. the art., and Maj. Boileau, comdg. the engrs., and which contributed so materially to the success of the operations against it, as well as the discipline, courage, and thorough good will of the troops engaged on them.

Anxious not to lose a day in relieving Saugor, I made continued marches, without a halt. The troops, on account of the difficulties of supply, were at times twenty-four hours without rations, and four days on duty before Rathghur without a relief, defending their camp against a numerous enemy in a dangerous country in their flanks and rear, attacking with all their energy, and taking, in three days, a fort, strong by nature and art, in their front, which Scindia, with a force of at least four times their strength, besieged for five months.

I shall have the honour to make favourable mention of the services of my staff in a future report.

I beg leave to enclose a return of the Oude art. found in the fort, and of the casualties in my force before Rathghur.

The troops took three large standards, two of which bore the red extended hand, the device of Mahomedan rebellion.

I beg to offer my excuses for the length of this report, which is caused by the varied nature of the operations. I cannot conclude it without returning my sincere thanks to H.E. and to Lord Elphinstone for having made my force as complete as circumstances would possibly allow, and for the very great kindness with which you have attended to all my requests on this subject.

HUGH ROSE, Maj. gen.,
Comdg. C.I.F.F.

Action at Barodia.

From Maj. Gen. Sir Hugh Rose, K.C.B., comdg. C. I. F. F., to Col. Green, C.B., Adj. gen. of the army.

Sir,—I have the honour to state to you, for the information of H. E. the C. in C., that after the capture of Rathghur, the rebels, who had retired from Chunderapore to Barodia, as mentioned in my report of the 7th Feb., 1858, concentrated in the latter place, having been reinforced by such of the garrison of Rathghur as had escaped, and by rebels from Koraye and other places in Bundelcund.

2. Barodia, on the left bank of the river Beena, is a strong village with a "gurrie," or small fort, with dense jungle on each side, about twelve miles from Rathghur, on the road to Koraye, a strong fort, twenty-nine miles to the north of Saugor.

3. The object of the rebels in concentrating to Barodia was to prevent or endanger my advance at Saugor, by retaking Rathghur, or by placing themselves in my rear, on the road from Bhopall to Saugor, to cut off, as they had already attempted to do, the supplies coming to me from the friendly states of Scindia and Bhopall. It was, consequently, necessary to attack the enemy and drive them out of Barodia.

4. Taking with me the force stated in the margin,* I marched at mid-day, on the 31st ult., from Rathghur, leaving Brigdr. Steuart with the remainder of my force to protect Rathghur and the camp.

5. I moved in the order of march which I always adopt when near the rebels, as a precaution against their system of surprises; that is, a line of flankers of H.M.'s 14th Lt. drags. on each side of the road, fifty yards in front of the leading file of the advanced guard, which, with a file of irregulars, has charge of the guides; another line of irreg. cav., 150 yards echelon in front of the outward flanks of the 14th, and, should thick jungle border the road, a comp. of inf. in extended order on each side of it to support the flankers of the 14th and the advanced guard. By this means all dangerous ground is searched, surprises are almost impossible, and spies, lying concealed at a great distance from the road, are frequently seized.

6. As we approached Barodia and the river Beena, we had very thick jungle, long grass, and nullahs on our left. The flankers of the irrs. suddenly halting, reported that they perceived the enemy in force in ambuscade on our left. Being with the advanced guard, which was under Lieut. col. Turnbull, I ordered the two guns of his troop to open their fire to the left on the enemy; before they could do so the enemy opened a musketry fire on us, killing Lieut. col. Turnbull's horse, and keeping it up with tenacity, although I reinforced the division of H. A. with four of Capt. Lightfoot's nine-pdrs., firing grape and round-shot: it was too close for shrapnell.

7. Lieut. col. Turnbull, with the H.A., took ground to the right, with a view to enfilade the enemy, but he could not get a slant at them. However, this movement enabled him to obtain good views of a body of rebel horsemen, with a red standard, endeavouring to gain a wood to our right and outflank us. I had directed a charge of cav. against them, but it could not be executed in consequence of the staff officer being unable to find a passage down the high banks of the Beena. Two rounds of spherical case burst amongst this batch; they disappeared.

8. I had placed the 3rd Eur. in skirmishing order, in front of the flanks of the guns, their united fire diminished, but did not silence the fire of the rebels.

9. I therefore charged the rebels out of their advanced position, with the skirmishers of the 3rd Eur., who, under Lieut. col. Liddell, gallantly drove them out of their own treacherous element, thick jungle and twisting nullahs, and took possession of the bank of the river, commanding the ford to Barodia, which now first became visible; the rebels had displayed so much obstinacy in defending this position in order to prevent our advance across the Beena to Barodia.

10. Lieut. col. Liddell, Capt. Neville, R.E., Capt. Campbell, 3rd Eur., Capt. Rose, my A. D. C., and Lieut. Macdonald,† Ass. qr. mr. gen., were conspicuous in this advance.

11. I turned the advantage gained by the 3rd Eur. immediately to account, and sent the Hyderabad irr. cav. supported by the 3rd By. Lt. cav. under Capt. Forbes to cross the ford covered by the skirmishers, to pass through the jungle to the front and fall on the enemy in the open, which I had learnt was between the jungle and Barodia. I followed with four guns of the h. a. and a trp. of H. M.'s 14th Lt. drag. in support, * 4 guns H.A., 4 guns Capt. Lightfoot's batt., 2 5½ inch mortars, with 15 men of Capt. Woolcomb's batt., under the command of Lieut. Strutt, 8 trps. 14th Lt. drags., 2 trps. 3rd By. Lt. cav., 25 men Madras sappers and miners, 3rd Eur. regt., detach. Hyderabad cont. f. c., under Capt. Hare.

† Lieut. Macdonald was slightly wounded, and his horse twice wounded.

under Lieut. col. Turnbull, ordering the rest of my force to follow, with the exception of Capt. Hare's inf. and guns, which remained at the fort to prevent the rear being cut off.

12. Capt. Forbes found the enemy's flanks, particularly their left, posted in thick jungle, their centre in comparatively open ground; he charged and broke their centre, cutting up thirty or forty of them. The third, and a very strong position, the village of Barodia, now came within sight. Capt. Forbes having observed a body of cav. retreating leisurely on it, attempted to cut them off, but their flight, on seeing his intention, became so rapid, that he only succeeded in killing eight or ten of them before they got well under the protection of their guns, in position at their village, and of the matchlock-men posted in the dense jungle, which surrounded three sides of it, and lining the banks of a wet nullah running along the front.

13. Capt. Forbes mentioned for their conduct on this occasion, and I beg to recommend to H.E. the C. in C. Subadar Soojut Khan, for having himself killed three of the rebels, all of his own caste, Naick Hunut Sing, very severely wounded, Babadheen Khan and Trooper Vass, also severely wounded, who attracted the notice of their officers by engaging singly two or three of the enemy at the same time.

14. On the day before, when the camp was attacked, the same faithful Subadar tendered the advance of the enemy by the able disposition of his picket.

15. If H.E. were pleased to obtain a reward for these brave soldiers, it would have a good effect on their regt., whose fidelity and courage have never failed.

16. Jemadar Jhurut Hoosanie Khan, 3rd Hyderabad cav., was mortally wounded in courageously attacking singly a knot of the enemy.

17. Capt. Forbes conducted the charge with the same gallantry and intelligence which distinguished him at Kashab.

18. Although the ford was a bad one, Lieut. col. Turnbull took his guns across it rapidly in support of the cav., and when, by the strength of the enemy's position, they were compelled to give up the pursuit, unlimbered in front of the village and the enemy's guns, and opened an effective fire on their position. Capt. Lightfoot, with the 9-pdr. batt., arrived shortly afterwards.

19. The enemy answered with guns and rockets, killing at my side to my great regret Capt. Neville of the R.E., acting as my A.D.C.; knowing what excellent service he had done as an engr. officer before Sebastopol, I had brought him up by forced marches to assist in the reduction of the forts in this country; during the action he was most useful to me, exhibiting to the last the courage and intelligence which had obtained for him so honourable a reputation.

20. Driven from their position by the fire of our guns, the enemy retreated across a wall and open space into the village and jungle. I directed Capt. Lightfoot to correspond to his movement, he took ground to the left with guns and gave them before they reached cover an enflading and destructive fire, the five and a-half inch mortars threw shell into the small fort of the village and jungle, to which the enemy had retired.

21. It was now getting dark, taking two comps. of the 3rd Eur., which had just come up, I crossed the wet nullah, and, bringing their right shoulders forward, occupied the wall round the village, and surrounded it with the skirmishers and a trp. of the 3rd lt. cav. Lieut. col. Liddell afterwards occupied it and the little fort, but the enemy, except a few valaitee skirmishers who were killed, had fled to Koraye through the jungle, leaving baggage unpacked and other signs of a precipitate retreat.

22. I was not at all sure that my camp with the siege art. and numerous stores, left with a small force at Rathghur, under Brigd. Stuart, might not be attacked during my absence, as it had been before; I therefore halted in the village only for a short time in order to rest the troops who had been on duty for the last five days, and marched back the same night to Rathghur; they were marching or engaged fifteen hours.

The enemy's loss was severe. They themselves stated it to be from four to five hundred, which is not surprising, as they were exposed to a well-directed fire for a length of time. Amant Sing, their ablest military leader, and a nephew of Tajie Mahomed Khan, were killed, and the rajah of Banpore was wounded.

The valaitees and Pathans fought with their accustomed courage, several of them, even when dying, springing from the ground and inflicting mortal wounds with their broadswords.

The good result of the defeat of the rebels at Barodia exceeded my expectations. Not only were my communications with the west and Saugor completely opened, but the rebels, flying from Barodia to Koraye, left in their panic that place, although it is a fort, in a strong position, and Krulassa, which is between thirty and forty miles to the N.W. of Saugor, Nurecawallee, their fortified camp, was also abandoned. All these places, and the country about them, had been in their hands for the last eight months. The rebels also left at Koraye their guns which they had at Barodia.

The troops behaved at Barodia with discipline and courage, keeping in very bad ground their formation, and obeying with eager alacrity any orders which brought them closer to the enemy. The 3rd Eur., although very young, and now for the first time in the field, have qualified themselves for a career of honour; and Lieut. col. Liddell is sure to lead the way.

I am much obliged to Capt. Wood, my asst. adj. gen. and my staff, for the assistance which they gave me on this occasion, as well as at Rathghur, and I ought to add that the officers of my divisional staff, whose duties are non-combatant, still in their zeal, accompany me to the field. Captain Campbell, baggage master, who was hit, was very useful and intelligent in conveying my orders, and Lieut. Lyster, my interpreter, of the 72nd regt. Bengal N.I., was wounded when engaging the nephew of Mahomed Fazil Khan, whom he killed.

I have the honour to enclose a list of the casualties at Barodia, as also a list of the sappers and miners, whom Major Boileau, comdg. engineer, wishes to be mentioned for having inspected the ditch and the breach at the Fort of Rathghur.

Adj. gen's. Office, Bombay,
17th March, 1858.

Sir,—In continuation of my previous communications Nos. 2,133 and 2,288, dated respectively the 9th and 13th inst., I am directed by the C. in C. to transmit, for submission to the rt. hon. the Gov. in Council, the enclosed letter, (without date,) from Maj. gen. Sir Hugh Rose, K.C.B., comdg. C.I.F.F., detailing his proceedings subsequent to the capture of the Fort of Rathghur and action with the insurgents near the town of Barodia.

The operations of Sir Hugh Rose in the field, while they have the cordial approval of the C. in C., will, doubtless, be most satisfactory to his lordship in council, as the success which has attended them must have the most beneficial effect in tranquillising a district which has been so long in the hands of the rebels.

The Lieut. gen. comdg. in chief has desired me to submit in the margin* of this letter the names of officers prominently brought to notice by Sir Hugh Rose, and to beg that the right hon. the gov. in council will be pleased to bring their conduct prominently to the notice of the hon. Court of Directors.

The Maj. gen. will be directed to constitute a Court of Inquiry under the provisions of Act 273, section XXXIX. of Jameson's Code, with the view of ascertaining if the native officer and men alluded to in the 13th and 14th paragraphs of his despatch, are entitled to admittance to the distinction of the Order of Merit.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

THE majority of our readers, we suspect, will be more surprised than pleased with the "Narrative of the Course of Legislation, 1857-58," which, commenced in our last number, is concluded in the present one. We confess that our object has been rather to disgust than to amuse them. Our intention, if not amiable, was not without a grave purport, and we are greatly mistaken if that has not been justly divined. In the course of such a momentous year as 1857-58, it might have been expected that at least some one indication of wisdom and forethought would have been exhibited by a Council representing the sagacity and experience of the Indian Government. Any such expectation, if ever formed, must have been cruelly disappointed by the actual facts of the case. A semblance of energy was, indeed, for a moment displayed. The liberty of the press was suspended, restrictions were placed on the possession of arms and ammunition, and after a time foreigners were brought under a passport system, and reminded of la chère patrie. Various enactments, too, were passed authorising the infliction of corporal punishment, the branding of mutineers and deserters, the confiscation of property under particular circumstances, and a general enhancement of the terrors of the penal code. But we look in vain for the slightest indication of real legislative capacity. There is no one symptom of foresight, no breadth of views, no definiteness of purpose. The new Acts are nothing more than old Acts soled and heeled, cobbled up to pull through the dirty weather at the risk of going barefooted afterwards. True, other measures were introduced than merely those referring to the exigencies of the moment, the pièces de circonstance, as they may be called. Are there not ten or a dozen Acts regulating Port-dues and Harbour-fees, and doing away with Lighthouse-dues? Is there not a tax on carriages and horses imposed upon the residents in the suburbs of Calcutta? Are there not Acts to repeal Acts, and to amend others, of such urgent importance, to wit, as the law of Patents and the construction of Small Cause Courts? The debts of H.H. the Nabob of the Carnatic, and the settlement of land gained by alluvion in Bengal—were not they, too, referred to Select Committees? What more, then, do we desire? Why, simply this: that the minor Presidencies be permitted to administer their own internal affairs without constant reference to Calcutta, and that the Council at each Presidency should in some degree be representative. We do not ask for a Parliament, or any such absurdity, but only that the Councils should be sufficiently large not to be a mere clique at the mercy of the Governor, or Governor-general, but a fearless deliberative assembly, cognisant of the questions submitted to its practical knowledge. At least, let there be one of two things: either a Council, or Councils, consisting of ten or a dozen members, one-third official Europeans, one-third non-official Europeans, and one-third natives; or let the Governor, or Governor-general, be despotic, responsible only to Parliament, and issuing his mandates through his Secretaries of Departments. In either case we should escape the annoyances and disgrace of a pettifoggery, make-believe administration, too feeble to inaugurate great and useful measures, and too inflated with its own importance to be sensible of its ignorance and imbecility. There might then be some chance of retaining India as a valuable possession of the British Crown, and even if ultimately lost, of being lost without dishonour; while under the present system it is a source of neither profit nor honour, but only a conspicuous monument of British bungling, obstinacy, and perverseness.

RAJAH JEY LALL SING.

ONE by one the leaders of the late rebellion are expiating their guilt. This time it is not merely the misguided multitude that suffers, but the chiefs also come in for a fair share of retribution. Had they done no more than use every legitimate means to free their country from a foreign yoke, we could admire their patriotism and almost pity their failure. But they were not patriots—they were, in fact, robbers and murderers, athirst for plunder and bloodshed. And it was not in the well-contested field that they sought to strike down their national foes, and to purge the land from the Christian usurpers. Had this been the case, we could not have blamed them, however much we might have deplored their infatuation. Such were not their tactics. They preferred the easier and ignoble triumph of butchering unarmed men, and tender delicate women and little children. Some of the miscreants, indeed, are still at large, and one pre-eminently bad has escaped through the maladroitness of an otherwise intelligent officer. Not a few, however, have already expiated their monstrous crimes against God and man, and now another has been convicted and sentenced to a felon's death. Though loathing unnecessary bloodshed, and doubtful if fallible man is ever justified in awarding capital punishment to an erring, perhaps an innocent brother, we cannot but feel that so long as the penalty of death remains on the Statute-book, the villain Rajah Jey Lall Sing is worthy to die by the hands of the common hangman. The charges first brought against him were four in number, viz.:—

"First Charge.—Aiding and abetting in the murder of Mrs. Green, Miss Jackson, Mrs. Rodgers, Mr. Carew, Mr. J. Sullivan, Mrs. Freelow (insane), Baptist Jones, Barker, and other Christians, and Mamood Khan Kotwal; in all, twenty-two or twenty-three persons, on the 24th September, 1857.

"Second Charge.—Being accessory to the murder of Mr. Devere, of the Telegraph department, on the 19th November, 1857, whose head he sent to the durbar, and encouraging the arrest and murder of Christians generally and their followers.

"Third Charge.—Being a leader in rebellion; in organising a rebel Government; in having placed himself at the head of the rebel sepoys and murderers, becoming the spokesman of the rebel officers to the Begum and medium of communication between the rebel army and Brijis Kudr; holding high office, and having a gaol for the confinement of Christians, and other acts of leadership.

"Fourth Charge.—In having deputed his brother to meet and escort the proclaimed rebel and murderer, the Nana, and having himself met and escorted him to the Dowlat Khanah Palace at Lucknow on or about the 2nd September, 1857."

These serious offences having been carefully investigated by Mr. P. Carnegy, Deputy Commissioner, were subsequently modified as follows:—

"First Charge.—Being a leader in rebellion, in organising a rebel government, in having placed himself at the head of the rebel sepoys and murderers, in becoming the spokesman of the rebel officers to the Begum and medium of communication between the rebel army and Brijis Kudr, in holding high office, in having a gaol for the confinement of Christians, and encouraging the arrest and extermination of Christians generally and their followers.

"Second Charge.—Aiding and abetting in the murder of Mrs. Green, Miss Jackson, Mrs. Rodgers, Mr. Carew, Mr. J. Sullivan, Mrs. Freelow (insane), Baptist Jones, Barker, and other Christians, and Mamood Khan Kotwal—in all twenty-two or twenty-three persons—on the 24th September, 1857."

That he was likewise accessory to the death and decapitation of Mr. Devere is likewise placed beyond a reasonable doubt. But he escaped conviction on the ground that in this "diabolical war" no prisoners were made, and that, consequently, Mr. Devere was put to death. In this Mr. Carnegy has, we think, fallen into a grave error. It was not a war, but a rebellion, that was raging; and the Rajah was not only a rebel, but a murderer. It was by his own men, commanded by his own relative, that the unfortunate gentleman was captured and beheaded; and it is distinctly stated that the Rajah sent in the head to the Begum, and was rewarded for his conduct. It is also very plain that he did welcome the Nana to Lucknow, and both through himself and his younger brothers testified his perfect satisfaction with the fiendish atrocities of that miscreant. However, there remains enough to hang him on the highest gallows that was ever erected since the days of Haman. The Rajah, indeed, endeavoured to prove an alibi at the time of the massacre of his prisoners, for he could not deny that they were in his custody; but witnesses depose positively to having seen him on a gateway looking down upon the scene of slaughter. There is, in truth, no shadow of a doubt as to his guilt—the only doubt entertained affect Lord Canning's firmness and sense of justice. The natives have been so much petted and pampered by his lordship, that no one believes in the possibility of a nobleman, however low the origin of his family, atoning for his crimes on the scaffold. It has almost come to this, that the conquerors begin to veil their countenances before the conquered. Certainly no man who wishes to curry favour with the Viceroy would venture to say a word against Hindoo or Mahomedan. But we are now treading on dangerous ground, and must content ourselves with expressing a hope that for once Lord Canning will turn a deaf ear to the pleadings of his naturally clement disposition—we had nearly used another epithet—and will fearlessly discharge his duty to his fellow countrymen as well as to his Indian fellow-subjects.

NARRATIVE OF THE COURSE OF LEGISLATION, 1857-58.

Act XXVIII. of 1857 (an Act relating to the importation, manufacture, and sale of arms and ammunition, and for regulating the right to keep or use the same), introduced on the 1st August and passed on the 5th September, was expressly limited in duration to two years.

Act XXIX. of 1857 (an Act to make better provision for the collection of Land Customs on certain foreign frontiers of the Presidency of Bombay) accommodates the law to the actual practice, and supplies various deficiencies in Act II. of 1852.

Act XXX. of 1857 (an Act for the levy of Port-dues and Fees in the Port of Calcutta) fixes the rates of Port-dues and fees for the Port of Calcutta as required by Section XLI. of the Ports Act XXII. of 1855.

Act XXXI. of 1857 (an Act for the levy of Port-dues and Fees in the Port of Bombay) imposes a consolidated Port-due not exceeding two annas per ton on sea-going vessels of the burden of ten tons and upwards entering the port, in lieu of the Light, Buoy, and Anchorage Dues previously levied.

Act XXXII. of 1857 (an Act to amend the Articles of War for the Native Army), introduced on the 14th and passed on the 21st November, authorises "the Executive Government to order Mutineers and Deserters to be severally marked with the letters M and D, together with such other marks as the Government may consider necessary for the purpose of identifying offenders, or of denoting the punishment to which they had been sentenced."

Act XXXIII. of 1857 (an Act to make further provision relating to Foreigners), introduced on the 7th and passed on the 28th November, requires every foreigner—that is, every person not a British-born subject—to report himself on his arrival, "and make known the nation to which he belongs, the place from which he has come, the place of his destination, and his objects of pursuit in India." Foreigners may also be removed or detained in custody, if they neglect to remove themselves as directed by Government. Masters of vessels, acting as such, are exempted from the operations of this Act, except that they are obliged to send in the names of their passengers.

Act XXXIV. of 1857 (an Act relating to the sale of Ganja in the Presidency of Bombay) extends to the Presidency Town of Bombay the provisions of Act III. of 1852, which prescribes rules for granting licences for the sale of bhang, ganja, and other intoxicating preparations.

Act XXXV. of 1857 (an Act for the levy of Port-dues in the Ports of Maulmain, Rangoon, Kyauk, Phyoo, Akyab, and Chittagong) fixes the following maximum rate for all vessels of ten tons and upwards entering the ports on the eastern side of the Bay of Bengal:—Maulmain, 4 annas for every ton of burden; Rangoon, 6; Kyauk Phyoo, 4; Akyab, 4; and Chittagong, 4½.

Act I. of 1858 (an Act to make lawful compulsory labour for the prevention of mischief by inundation, and to provide for the enforcement of customary labour on certain works of irrigation in the Presidency of Fort St. George) empowers the local authorities to cause a levy en masse of the labouring population in the neighbourhood to prevent or check the consequences of inundation: it also enforces customary labour for the purpose of irrigation and drainage; that is, village communities are required by immemorial custom to keep in good order the watercourses leading from the Government works to the fields, and those who neglect to do so may now be assessed double the value of their labour contribution.

Act II. of 1858 (an Act for the levy of Port-dues in certain Ports in the Province of Cuttack) imposes a maximum rate of 6 annas the hundred maunds, or little more than 1½ anna per ton, on all vessels of the burden of 300 maunds and upwards entering certain ports within a coast-line of 70 miles in the province of Cuttack.

Act III. of 1858 (an Act to amend the law relating to the arrest and detention of State Prisoners), introduced and passed on the 23rd January, extends to the Presidency Towns the regulations previously in force in the Mofussil.

Act IV. of 1858 (an Act for providing for the exercise of certain powers by the Governor-general during his absence from the Council of India), introduced and passed on the 28th January, was limited to six months, but subsequently extended by Act XXVII. of 1858 to a further period of six months.

Act V. of 1858 (an Act for the punishment of certain offenders who have escaped from gaol, and of persons who shall knowingly harbour such offenders), introduced on the 2nd and passed on the 23rd January, was more particularly directed against the convicts who had broken loose out of gaol during the rebellion. All crimes against person or property, attended with great personal violence, hereby render the offenders liable to transportation for life.

Act VI. of 1858 (an Act to authorise the impressment of artisans and labourers for the erection of buildings for the European troops in India, and for works urgently required for Military purposes), introduced on the 16th, and passed on the 23rd January, ceased to operate on the 29th July, 1858.

Act VII. of 1858 (an Act for the levy of Port-dues and Fees at Ports within the Presidency of Fort St. George) imposes on vessels of twenty tons and upwards the maximum rates of 3 annas per ton for Madras, Tutacoria, and Cocanada, of 2 annas for Cochin, and one on all the others.

Act VIII. of 1858 (an Act for the levy of Port-dues and Fees in the Port of Kurrachee) prescribes a quarterly rate of four annas a ton on all vessels of ten tons and upwards.

Act IX. of 1858 (an Act for the levy of Port-dues in certain Ports within the limits of the Gulf of Cambay) imposes a rate of two annas per ton on all vessels of ten tons and upwards.

Act X. of 1858 (an Act to authorise the confiscation of villages, the imposition of fines, and the forfeiture of certain offices in cases of rebellion and other crimes committed by inhabitants of villages or by members of tribes; and also to provide for the punishment of proprietors of land who neglect to assist in the suppression of rebellion or in the apprehension of rebels, mutineers, or deserters), introduced on the 23rd January and passed on the 6th March, was limited in duration to two years, and in extent to districts indicated by Government.

Act XI. of 1858 (an Act to authorise the infliction of corporal punishment in certain cases), introduced on the 2nd January and passed on the 27th February, was limited to two years—Europeans being exempted from its operations.

Act XII. of 1858 (an Act for raising funds for making and repairing roads in the suburbs of Calcutta and the Station of Howrah), imposes a horse and carriage tax upon the residents of the suburbs, and authorises an additional assessment under Act XX. of 1856.

Act XIII. of 1858 (an Act for the punishment of persons who unlawfully possess or conceal arms or other property belonging to her Majesty or to the East India Company), introduced on the 30th January, and passed on the 20th March, was limited to two years.

Act XIV. of 1858 (an Act to extend the provisions of Act XXI. of 1855 in the Presidency of Fort St. George), to Minors not subject to the superintendence of the Court of Wards, gives the Zillah Courts and the Sudder Adawlut in respect of the education of minors, for whom guardians are appointed by them, the same powers as by Act XXI. of 1855 are given to Collectors of Revenue and to the Court of Wards under similar circumstances.

Act XV. of 1858 (an Act for the levy of Port-dues in the Port of Aden) fixes a maximum rate of one anna per ton on vessels of ten tons and upwards.

Act XVI. of 1858 (an Act to amend Act XXV. of 1858) provides that the Ootacamund

Sessions Court shall no longer be presided over by a Sudder Ameen, but by an officer of the class of Subordinate Judges.

Act XVII. of 1858 (an Act to repeal the laws relating to the levy of Light-dues at Ports within the limits of the Gulf of Cambay), introduced on 27th February, and passed on 10th April, repeals Regulation VI., 1831, of the Bombay Code and Act I. of 1836. The consolidated Port-dues include Lighthouse-dues.

Act XVIII. of 1858 (an Act for the regulation of certain Ports within the Presidency of Fort St. George) provides for the preservation of certain ports not considerable enough to be made subject to the provisions of the Ports Act XXII. of 1855.

By Order of the Secretary of State for India in Council.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN. That a number (to be hereafter determined) of JUNIOR APPOINTMENTS in the Engineer Establishment, and of Junior Appointments in the Upper Subordinate Establishment of the Department of Public Works in India, will next year be open to PUBLIC COMPETITION.

On applying with these documents at the Department of Public Works in this Office, in the course of the month of May of next year (during which month only will applications be received), the names of the Candidates will be registered, and they will be authorised to present themselves for examination, on an appointed day, at the Royal Indian Military College, at Addiscombe.

The Subjects of Examination, and the maximum number of marks to be awarded for proficiency in each, will be the following:—

No Candidate will be passed who shall not obtain 600 marks, of which at least 140 must be awarded for Mathematics; but the Candidates who may obtain the prescribed number of marks will be ranked by the Examiners in the order of the numbers they may severally obtain, and as many of them as may be required at the time for the public service will be appointed "Probationers of the First Class," the appointments being given to those who stand highest in the Examiners' List.

Each Probationer must, within a month of his nomination, sign a covenant, describing the terms and conditions of his appointment, and must embark for India when required to do so by the Secretary of State in Council, who will provide for the expenses of his passage. Any nominee not embarking when required will forfeit his appointment. He will be allowed pay, at the rate of 170 rupees (which is about the equivalent of £17 in English money) a month, from the date of his embarkation.

On arriving in India he will be placed in a Civil Engineering College, or in such other educational institution as the Local Government may appoint, in order to acquire a colloquial knowledge of one of the Native languages, and to receive further instruction in his profession. While thus studying he will be allowed free quarters, in addition to his monthly pay.

Probationers of this class, likewise, must execute covenants within a month of their nomination, and embark for India, when required to do by the Secretary of State in Council, who will provide for the expense of their passage; and, in default of embarking when required, will forfeit their appointments. They will be granted pay at the rate of 85 rupees (which is about the equivalent of £8. 10s. in English money) a month from the date of their embarkation. On arriving in India they will be placed in a Civil Engineering College, or other educational institution, in order to receive further instruction, and will be allowed free quarters while remaining at College. ## SIXTY YEARS OF SUCCESS HAVE PROVED BEYOND QUESTION THAT extraordinary properties for promoting the growth and improving and beautifying the human Hair. It prevents Hair from falling off or turning grey, strengthens weak Hair, cleanses it from Scurf and Dandruff, and makes it beautifully soft, pliable, and glossy. Its operation in cases of baldness is peculiarly active; and in the growth of Whiskers, the Beard, and Mustachios, it is unfailling in its stimulative operation. For CHILDREN it is especially recommended as forming the basis of A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, while its introduction into the Nursery of Royalty, and the numerous Testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; Family Bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION.—On the Wrapper of each Bottle are the words, "ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL," &c., in white letters, and their Signature, "A. ROWLAND AND SONS," in Red Ink. Sold at 20, Hatton-garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

TEETH.

No. 9, LOWER GROSVENOR-STREET, GROSVENOR-SQUARE.

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS

PATENT.—Newly-invented and Patented application of chemically prepared WHITE and GUM-COLOURED INDIA-RUBBER in the construction of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES.

Mr. EPHRAIM MOSELY, Surgeon-Dentist, No. 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, sole Inventor and Patentee.

A new, original, and invaluable invention, consisting in the adaptation, with the most absolute perfection and success, of chemically prepared White and Gum-coloured India-rubber, as a lining to the ordinary gold or bone frame. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted in a few of their most prominent features.

All sharp edges are avoided; no springs, wires, or fastenings, are required; a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity, hitherto wholly unattainable; and a fit, perfected with the most unerring accuracy, is secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose, or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums.

The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the chemically prepared India-rubber, and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may with thorough comfort be imbibed and retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being, at the same time, wholly provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

To be obtained only at 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, London; 14, Grafton-street, Bath; and 10, Eldon-square, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

To Regimental Messes they are peculiarly adapted, being more portable than jars, and not liable to breakage. B. M. and Co. would also recommend their Pickles, Sauces, Tart Fruits, &c., and their large stock of York and Cumberland Hams, Cheese, and Bacon.

THE MELTON RIDING BELT.—Important to those who are suffering from Weakness in the Back and General Debility. The following is printed by permission:—

"Sir,—You ask for my opinion of your Melton Riding Belt; I give it. Having resided for a long time in India, my constitution is very much debilitated, and for a long time I was suffering from a weakness in the back and the lower part of the body, which no internal remedy could reach, and the slightest exertion completely overpowered me. I was ordered by my medical man to wear a support, and seeing your advertisement I obtained one of your Melton Riding Belts, which I have worn for the last five months. It gives me great support. I can take riding or other exercise without feeling that extreme lassitude and weariness afterwards. My general health is much improved. You have my best thanks. You will secure my best support.—Yours truly,

"Torgny, July 30, 1859. J. PRATT MATHEWSON.

"To Wm. Elstap, 12, Avery-row, Bond-street."

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.

Consumption is almost invariably preceded by great debility, cough, loss of appetite, and flushes. The alterative and tonic influence of Holloway's invaluable remedies operates like a charm in subduing these formidable symptoms. A course of these purifying Pills should at once be commenced, and at the same time Holloway's Ointment should be briskly rubbed, at least twice a day, over the back and chest. The Ointment is more effective when used after sponging with warm brine and well drying. The conjoint effect of this treatment is marvellous; a change for the better is observed within a week, and the improvement speedily progresses. The appetite returns, the shortness of breath ceases, and the harassing cough soon vanishes altogether.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE news of the capture of the Fort of Beyt is confirmed by the Bombay Mail of the 26th of October, though it appears that the storming-party was at first repulsed, and that the place was subsequently evacuated by the enemy. No intelligence had been received of the operations against Dwarka, regarded by the Waghers as impregnable.

The Governor-general arrived in Allahabad on the 14th of October, and proposed to proceed on the 17th to Cawnpore, where his lordship expected to meet the Commander in Chief. Great preparations were being made at Lucknow and Futtelghur, to give due éclat to the forthcoming durbars.

Our "magnanimous ally," Sir Jung Bahadur, G.C.B., has at length been bribed to act contrary to his conscience (!), by taking effective measures to expel the Oude fugitives from the Nepaulese territories. Rumours of the Nana's death had been industriously circulated at Lucknow, evidently with the intention of misleading the authorities.

Lord Canning's conduct in first refusing the £2 bounty to the Company's Europeans, and in afterwards disbanding them, has been approved by the Home Government, who, at the same time, instruct his lordship to offer them 40 rupees and a free kit to re-enlist for China. Of nearly one thousand men already embarked for England, only ten accepted the bait. A Calcutta correspondent, whose letter will be read with some interest, tells the reason why.

The intelligence from Japan, received through Mr. Reuter's office, is of a nature to cause disquietude. A Russian officer, a ship's steward, and a sailor have been foully murdered, and the natural demand for redress evaded under various pretexts. As a powerful Russian squadron is at present in the Japanese waters, we may expect to hear of that island-empire being very effectually opened to Europeans.

Letters and papers by the Calcutta and China Mail will probably be delivered in London on the 27th or 29th instant.

It has been decided that the East India Loans are not Stock according to the meaning of Lord St. Leonard's Act, and that consequently trust money cannot be invested therein.

BENGAL.

CALCUTTA CORRESPONDENCE.

CALCUTTA, 17th October, 1859.

The English papers, led by the Times, have, for some time past, condemned the policy of Lord Canning, regarding the old Company's European troops, in terms as unmeasured as the press of India. It was universally believed that the ministry disapproved of the acts of Lord Canning, by which a most valuable army has been lost to the public service, together with a million sterling, and that they hesitated to recall him only because of his political opinions and his friendly relations with some of the leading members of the Cabinet. To the astonishment of the Indian public Lord Canning, on the eve of his departure to the provinces, published a despatch from the Secretary of State for India, dated 31st August, 1859, entirely approving of the course he has pursued in the whole matter. Here is an extract:—

3. The Secretary of State has now replied to the reference in the following passages of a despatch, No. 302, dated August 31, 1859.

"In acknowledging the receipt of your letter No. 90, in the military department, dated June 24th last, but which did not reach me till August 11, I have to convey to you the full approval of her Majesty's Government of the measures which you have taken in granting the option of discharge and a free passage home to those European soldiers of the local army to whom the general order issued by you on June 20th, 1859, is applicable.

"The results of the courts of inquiry held at the several stations of the army have clearly established the prevalence of the conviction amongst the European soldiers that they had a right to an option in regard to the transfer of their services from the East India Company to the crown.

"The instructions conveyed in my despatch * gave you full powers to act in such manner as you might judge best for the good of the public service.

"The course which you have taken in pursuance of the discretion so entrusted to you is entirely approved."

What becomes of the angry diatribes of the Times and the English press regarding the blunders of Lord Canning, and the incapacity of those around him, when ministers themselves approve, in the most marked manner, the worst of all his acts? As a curious corollary to this published approval, an order arrived by telegraph from Bombay desiring Lord Canning to endeavour to detain the men by offering them a bounty of £5 each to re-enlist for China. Two vessels, with one thousand of the discharged men on board, were on the point of sailing from this port, and were stopped by order of the Governor-general. An officer was sent on board to offer the bounty, and try to induce the men to enlist for China; but so exasperated were they at the treatment they had received, that only ten men out of the thousand offered to remain. The hostility shown to them by Lord Canning has been of the most paltry and vexatious description—more worthy of a shrewish virago than of the viceroy of a great empire. Some of the men asked to be allowed to go to Australia, thus saving the Government the cost of their passage to England. It was refused. They were told they must go to England, or remain as soldiers with their regiments. One soldier showed that he had obtained a situation in India of some two or three hundred rupees a-month, and begged to be allowed to remain, as it would save the Government his passage-money, and himself the loss of six months' salary. No! he must go to England or remain with his regiment. Many of the old soldiers told the officer who was appointed to register their names for discharge that they would enlist for the Artillery without bounty. Colonel M— told me himself that, thinking the services of such men most valuable, he registered them as discharged, but ready to serve in the Artillery. They were told they must go to England or remain with their regiments. It is in a case like this that Lord Canning displays what he considers vigour and firmness, but which the public is malicious enough to call obstinacy and folly. With the support of ministers, however, he cares nothing for the Indian public, and he left us on the 11th, after publishing his despatch, to make a grand tour in the provinces, to hold grand durbars, and to reward those numerous loyal natives who fought side by side with us against the bloody mutineers to support the authority of his government. We shall watch his progress with curiosity, and expect that his acts will be in accordance with a policy and a succession of blunders that are without parallel in the annals of Indian governors.

Government has at last taken measures to secure the active co-operation of Jung Bahadur against Nana Sahib and his troops, who are still in the valleys of the Nepalese hills. The valuable territory called the "Trans Raptée districts," which had been taken from the Nepalese and given to the King of Oude, are now to be restored to them, on condition that the rebels are to be driven out of Nepal by the Ghorkas. The condition has been accepted, and troops under Jung Bahadur had, by the last accounts, entered the Deogurh valley. The following account of the place of abode of the Nana and his troops will be interesting to your readers.

"The valleys of Sonar and Deogurh, rendered famous as the principal abode of the rebels, lie beyond the first range of the Nepal hills, the first to the west, and the second to the east, and from which numerous passes lead into our territory. The principal of these are the Goolaree pass, the Kooronia pass, the Bhikhawa pass, the Bunsyee pass, the Sumputtre pass, and the Kungra pass. The first is the most considerable, and is opposite Sidhonia Ghaut. It is said to be an open road, passable for carriage of every description. It was through this pass that the great army of the rebels passed into Nepal at the beginning of the present year. The second is about sixteen miles east of Sidhonia Ghaut, and leads into the Sonar valley. There are two roads, neither practicable for wheeled carriage, leading to this pass, one by the village of Koodhawa from Sidhonia, and another by Kala from Musha. They both meet at a short distance in the jungle, and the spot has been frequently chosen by the rebels for a bivouac. They have been pursued and beaten in this pass no less than three times. The third, like the second, also leads into the Sonar valley, but is not so accessible. It is approached from the Musha side by the village of Kutkooyah, and from Sidhonia by Mangreyah. The fourth is to the north of Musha, leading into the Deogurh valley. Though not practicable for wheeled carriages, cattle of all kinds might pass through it. The Raptée flows on the northern side of this pass, and, it is said, may be conveniently availed of by the inhabitants of villages on the confines of Sonar and Deogurh for passage into our territories. The fifth is simply the bed of a mountain torrent. A body of rebels were thrashed in it in June. The sixth and last is about eighteen or twenty miles north-west of Toolsepoore, and about the same north-east of Musha. It leads into the Deogurh, and is, of course, the most likely pass through which the Deogurh rebels would choose, if they ever do, to come into the plains. They suffered most severely in it from our troops last spring.

"During the last campaign on the frontier we frequently came across the word 'Sota,' used in contradistinction to the term 'Pass,' and felt somewhat puzzled to know what it exactly meant. We now learn that 'Sota' is the name for the bed of a mountain torrent, of which there are innumerable in these hills, all more or less passable for men and cattle."

I have little news to communicate from this. All India is again full of irritation at the new measures of taxation proposed by Lord Canning, and we have no hope of any improvement from the advent of Mr. Wilson, from whom you seem to expect so much. He will be quite a cipher in the Supreme Council, and for months will not even see Lord Canning. There is but one hope for India, and that is the recall of the present Viceroy, and we see no chance of that so long as Ministers approve of the worst and most mischievous of his acts.

SALT IN OUDE.

Whilst the confiscation policy has been so successful in Oude that the Commissioner who carried it into effect lauds the wisdom which had placed despotic power in his hands, annihilating all previous claims and tenures, another great measure is in progress of which we hear nothing in the Legislative Council. The people of Oude have been prohibited manufacturing salt. The earth in many parts of that province teems with this mineral, and a large population obtained employment in its manufacture and preparation for market. The produce of the salt fields supplied all Oude, and was, moreover, carried into some of our older provinces. All this has been put an end to, by the same fiat which confiscated the lands. This is another great fiscal measure, to lay a tax on salt, and to collect it easily and cheaply. Oude, because it is difficult to tax the numerous small salt-works within its own territory, must import salt from the foreign territories of Bhurtpoor, and the States west and south of the Jumna. Salt must not only come burdened with the duty to Government, but it must come with the enormous charge of carriage over many hundred miles added to it. This is considered a politic measure, while an income tax is declared to be the contrary. At the same time we must admit that if the whole population of Oude is compelled to pay four times the price for their salt which they have hitherto done, it is necessary to be cautious before any more taxes are imposed upon them; of this immense addition to the price of salt one-half is probably taxation, and one-quarter the value of the produce of its own soil. The financial wisdom which has resolved on carrying out this measure in Oude is quite equal to that which has elaborated the Licence and Income-tax. This measure is copied from that which gave so much offence in the old provinces of the Doab. There was, however, some good reasons for prohibiting the manufacture of salt in those districts; a small portion of them only was distant from the salt producing lands, and as there were no large deposits nor extensive salt works in existence within them, the hardship involved in the system was not great, whilst the advantage to the revenue was undoubted. Smuggling was nearly annihilated, and the preventive lines were made efficient. But because this policy was so successful in the provinces which skirt the countries from whence the salt is exported, compelling the whole salt consumed in them to pass the revenue cordon, it certainly does not follow that the same policy should be extended to distant provinces whose circumstances are far from being the same. This is one of the serious cases where that anxiety to treat all India as one country, to be governed by the same rules and the same laws, becomes a great political blunder. The people of Oude will be irritated more by this step than by the disarming Act. It will render the British Government more unpopular, whilst the Act cannot be defended on any other grounds than that it is easier and more convenient to prohibit the production of salt in Oude than to prevent its manufacture under Excise laws. The precedent of the Rohilkund districts will be quoted, that they have suffered the hardship of paying the heavy carriage hire, as well as the taxation of the salt they consume. This is true; but in Rohilkund there are no salt-fields, or there are so few as to be of no weight in the consideration of the case. Rohilkund has always been dependent on Oude or the districts west and south of the Jumna for its supply of salt. So the injustice that we believe is now inflicted on Oude was never suffered by the people of Rohilkund from Government regulations regarding salt. Here is another example of a great fiscal measure being carried out without the slightest reference to council. Oude is despotically governed by the Governor-general of India; and as far as we can judge, the result of that government is very much like that of the Governor-general in Council for all India, backed by a Legislative Council of delegates from the services of the three presidencies.—Englishman.

MISCELLANEOUS.

STAFF APPOINTMENTS.—The Englishman says:—Some uneasiness has been felt regarding what Government would decide on the subject of staff appointments which become vacant in March next. Nearly the whole staff have to vacate under the law of five years' incumbency, that period expiring at the time mentioned. We understand it is decided that all the heads of offices, and their deputies, are to stand fast, with the exception of those whose inefficiency is not sufficiently covered by interest. All other officers holding staff appointments are to return to their regiments.

LE ROI EST MORT. VIVE LE ROI!—In an order dated Simla, the 30th September, H. E. the Commander in Chief in India directs that, instead of the terms "Honourable Company's service," "Her Majesty's Indian military service," "Her Majesty's service," "Her Majesty's Indian service," which are variously used at present in the form of regimental committee proceedings, in the cases of soldiers taking their discharge, the words "Her Majesty's—Regiment of Bengal European Cavalry," or "Her Majesty's—Regiment of Bengal European Infantry," or "Her Majesty's—Regiment of Bengal Artillery," are to be substituted in all such committee proceedings.

TEA PLANTATIONS.—The Supreme Government has resolved on disposing of all the tea plantations in the Kumaon and Mussooree Hills. In a short time, lists will appear, announcing the lots, and the terms on which it is intended to dispose of each plantation.

LIEUTENANT RICHARD BEADON, of the 4th European Light Cavalry, is appointed aide-de-camp to Lieut.-gen. the Hon. Sir James Outram, Bart., now President of the Council of the Governor-general of India.

RAJAH PROSUNO NARAIN DEB, BAHADUR, is appointed to be Honorary Assistant-Secretary to the Government of India, in the Financial Department, as a temporary arrangement, and accompanies the Governor-general in his tour in the North-West Provinces.

MAJOR ELLIOT.—The Governor-general in Council has appointed Major E. K. Elliot to be Commissioner and Agent to the Governor-general in the province of Nagpore, vice Mr. G. A. C. Plowden, whose services are placed at the disposal of the Government of Bengal.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL.—Lieut.-gen. the Hon. Sir James Outram, Bart., G.C.B., First Ordinary Member of the Council of the Governor-general of India, is appointed President of the Council, and Deputy-governor of the fort and garrison of Fort William, during the absence of the Governor-general from the Presidency.

UNION PRAYER MEETINGS.—Having already noticed, as an item of local intelligence, the fact that a series of Union Prayer Meetings was being held in the Old Church Room, every morning during the Durga Puja holidays, we may now state that on Saturday, the 8th of October, Rev. Mr. Sale, Pastor of Loll Bazaar Chapel, presided; on Monday, Mr. Sandys, of the Church Mission, Mirzapore; Tuesday, Mr. Powrie, Minister of the Free Church; and Wednesday, Mr. Cuthbert, Secretary of the Church Missionary Society. As the series of prayer meetings had originated in a proposal of the Rev. Dr. Duff, and he commenced it on Saturday, October 1st, he, at the request of his associates, concluded the series on the 12th, with remarks suitable to the occasion. The attendance throughout has been remarkable—the hall being always well filled, and sometimes overcrowded.—Phoenix.

JUBBULPORE, Oct. 4.—Since my letter to you of the 29th ultimo, further information has been received, confirmatory of the report concerning the opening, by Sir George Whitlock, of another campaign. Indeed, two flying columns have already marched into Bundelcund, one under the command of Colonel Whistler, of the 6th light cavalry, and another under some infantry officer, whose name I cannot just now bring to mind. Sir G. Whitlock leaves Saugor, it is said, about the 13th instant. 3000 rebels at present blockade the Mirzapore, but they will have to disperse like a disturbed nest of hornets, when the columns come at them; an event that will not very long be protracted. Squads of infantry and cavalry from the police corps here are leaving, to strengthen the various thannahs and outposts within the Jubbulpore district. A body of about eighty infantry, and as many cavalry men, under the command of Adjutant Sutherland, of the police, leave, about the end of the week, for the village of "Burkaree," on the Saugor road, about fifteen miles distant, where some rebels already exist, or are expected to arrive about that time.—Specialist.

THE NANA.—The Oude Gazette says:—We have no news of any importance from the frontier or the districts. Reports of the death of the Nana continue to come in, but the fact still remains to be proved. One of our correspondents writes to say that the Nepaulese have stopped supplying the rebels, but this can hardly be. The great exodus, however, has not commenced yet, nor does there appear any sign of it. A small body of rebels attempted to cross over at Kyree Ghaut, on the other side of the Raptée, but were prevented, and some few of them made prisoners and brought into Toolseepoor. We (Lucknow Herald) have the latest news from the frontier. The Nana has ordered all the rebel forces scattered in various positions along the frontier to repair to his camp, where 7,000 sepoys have already assembled. Subadar Debee Sing, of the Nusserabad force, has also 5,000 men. To these may be added about 2,000 with the Begum and Mummoo Khan, and a detachment of 500 in the jungle near Bilwa. The whole force may be taken in round numbers at 14,000 men. A consultation was held in the Nana's camp on the 10th instant, when the several leaders agreed upon uniting their forces and placing the whole under the Nana's orders.

A NATIVE UNDER-SECRETARY.—From an article in the Allahabad Commercial Gazette, we learn that the Government of India intend to appoint a native under-secretary. Whether the information is correct or not we do not know. If it is not correct, all we can say is, it ought to be. Mr. Henry Ricketts in his able report strongly recommended the measure, not only as one of economy, but of sound and judicious policy. It has been found necessary, recently, to raise the salary of an under-secretary from Rs. 1,250 to Rs. 2,000 to secure the services of a competent civilian. The increase would not be required if the appointment were bestowed on a native, and it is not improbable this very circumstance may have suggested the change to Lord Canning.—Indian Field.

EAST INDIAN RIFLE REGIMENT.—The following establishment of officers is sanctioned for the East Indian Rifle Regiment:—One commandant, on Rs. 280 per mensem, including Rs. 30 horse allowance; one second in command, on Rs. 500 per mensem (consolidated); one adjutant and quartermaster (in one person), on Rs. 170-14 per mensem; three officers "doing duty."

A DEPUTY CLERK OF THE CROWN is to be appointed, on a salary of Rs. 500 per mensem. Mr. Wylie accepts the post of Prothonotary, on a reduced salary of Rs. 2,000. The salary drawn by the late incumbent was Rs. 3,000.

STAFF EMPLOY.—Government (says the Phoenix) have called on the Adjutant-general of the Bengal army, for a list of all military officers at present on staff employ, the list to detail the time each officer has been absent from regimental duty, when he was first nominated to staff employ, the various staff situations he has held, the pay and allowances he has drawn while on the staff, the situation or situations he now holds, and, in short, everything connected with his staff career. The Adjutant-general at Calcutta has accordingly called on the various public departments for the information necessary to enable him to compile such a return.

EXTRADITION OF DESERTERS.—A question has been referred to the Supreme Government by the Lieutenant-governor of the Punjab on the following point:—Whether our officers can demand, from independent chiefs, the delivery of soldiers, natives of their territories, who have deserted from our service. The converse of this question was settled in June, 1836, and if natives of our territory desert from the service of independent chiefs, they are amenable only to our tribunals. On the principle of reciprocity, therefore, it would appear that we are not entitled to demand deserters, residents of a foreign territory. During the mutiny such demands were enforced, but the times were exceptional. Considering the paucity of foreigners in our service, its interest, advantages, and the conventional character of the crime, it is considered inexpedient, as a general rule, to demand the surrender of foreign deserters.

CHINSURAH.—Government has ordered the employment of the Bombay native infantry at Hooghly to protect the courts, civil, revenue, and criminal, and other public offices, from the depredations of the discharged European soldiers, the conduct of some of whom has been of a most alarming character. The roads leading to the Hooghly station and the vicinity of the college are likewise guarded by the infantry. Although every precaution has been taken in this way to keep the peace and to protect the inhabitants, yet the complaints of the grievous outrages committed by some of these men are as loud as ever. The magistrate, Mr. Cockerel, in order so far as possible to check the drunkenness so habitual among these fellows, caused all the grog-shops in Chinsurah and Hooghly to be closed during the last week. This of course excited the anger of the soldiers, a body of whom waylaid him whilst taking an evening drive, stopped his carriage, and threatened him with their vengeance. Mr. Cockerel talked with them, and showed them that he was only acting in consonance with orders. Their attention was then diverted towards M. Halket, the Judge, who was also out for a drive, and whom they in turn pursued, but he was fortunate enough to reach the shelter of his house, and escaped what threatened to become a serious danger. It is said they took away a horse out of the judge's stable, which, however, was afterwards recovered from them.—Englishman.

SHAHJAHANPORE, Sept. 30.—The 17th P. I. marched direct from Pilibhet to Shahjahanpore. A very loyal old native banker at Bareilly, named Misser Baignant, has been very handsomely rewarded by Government for his faithfulness; he has received the title of Raja, and a present of a number of the best villages in the district; the Government revenue of which amounted to Rs. 15,000 a-year.

A BAD "JOB."—One of the jobs of the present Indian Government was the appointment of Major Archibald Henry Plantagenet Stuart Wortley, of the 1st Dragoon Guards—a relative of Lady Canning's—as First Assistant to the Resident of Baroda. The major will not hold the appointment for any length of time, as, we hear, orders have been received from the Home Government directing his removal from the office.—Bengal Hurkaru.

LUCKNOW, 8th Oct.—"Somewhat of a lull after the exciting trial and execution of Jyelall Singh; Ram Buksh of Dhoondia Khara is under trial at Roy Bareilly. I cannot say whether he will be tried here, or at Roy Bareilly. As the commissioner starts next week on his tour, the probability is that he will dispose of the case on the spot. Jyelall's execution has caused a great sensation in the city, the nobles, many of whom were as guilty as, if not more than, Jyelall (only that there is no proof against them), begin to tremble for their own safety; for, argue they, if a person who came in under the amnesty is hanged for barely witnessing the execution of Christians, whom he might have saved if he would, what guarantee have we that we are safe? The general impression is that Jyelall was executed, innocent, a martyr to his cause. One of the greatest mistakes we made was in hanging him with his face towards the sun, being a Hindoo it is likely to be construed to their own advantage. The Chief Commissioner has abolished the tax on "Gunjwanna," or sugarcane juice, which was prevalent in some parts of the province, the benefits resulting from so judicious a step are apparent. The Commander-in-Chief has called for a list of all military officers in civil employ in Oude, but with what object I cannot say, although it is hoped that some steps may be taken to confine them to appointments to which they legitimately belong, instead of allowing them to serve civil capacities, to the utter exclusion of men better capable of discharging those duties. What do you think our Deputy Commissioner, Mr. Carnegy, has been guilty of? He has imprisoned Mr. Shore, his second clerk, for one month, with hard labour, because he wanted to resign, and would not give the usual notice of fifteen days. He was charged with breach of contract, and, under Act XIII. of 1859, which has been extended to Oude, and, as Mr. C. says, to guard against the caprices of such men as Mr. Shore, he thought it advisable to do what he has done. Without waiting to discuss the illegality of the sentence, I must say that if no notice is taken of the matter, the character and respectability of every uncovenanted servant is at stake, for whenever it may suit Mr. Carnegy, and men of his stamp, they will deal with others as Mr. Carnegy has found it necessary (so he says) to deal with Mr. Shore and "men of his stamp." The Chief Commissioner has refused to sanction the printing by the proprietors of the Oude Gazette of a vernacular paper. "There is one in existence now sufficient to meet all requirements, and the Chief Commissioner does not see the necessity for another."—Commercial Gazette.

RIOT AT CAWNPORE.—There has been a great row to-day, Oct. 3rd, in this city. Yesterday evening, at the Ramleelah, some of Tonachey's Jazailchees were looking on, and would not keep back, so a row ensued, and the Chuprassies licked them. This morning the whole regiment, about 1,200 strong, went into the city in gangs, armed, and beat every Chuprassie they could find, and attacked the Thannahs and Chowkeys. Tonachey, their C. O., was away at Allahabad, and their native officers, after great delay and difficulty, got the men back to their lines: they have taken good revenge for the work of last night.

EXECUTION OF BUNDEH HUSSUN AND FUTTEH ALI.—I was up this morning, October 12, a little before four o'clock. I was determined to be in time to see the execution of the two miscreants, who were hanged for the part they took in the murder of our countrymen and countrywomen in 1857. I arrived on the ground just in time, it was a little after six, I think. There were few natives, in fact, much fewer than I expected, and much less than attended the execution of Raja Jye Lal Singh. The scaffold was surrounded by the jail guard on one side, and the police on the opposite side. The assemblage of Europeans and Christians was comparatively small, and I did not see a single native nobleman. The feelings of the natives seemed to me more partaking of curiosity than sympathy, although from the smallness of their numbers one would have fancied that the great bulk of the people did sympathise with the culprits. It must be remembered, too, that the offenders were both Mahomedans, and few, if any of that class, I remarked, were present. The most of the native spectators were Hindoos. There were few or no citizens present; those who were on the ground were residents of the neighbourhood and its immediate vicinity. The scaffolding was erected within a few yards of the monument which marks the spot where our fellow Christians were murdered. I might with good reason say butchered, for, after musketry failed to do its work, the sword played a conspicuous part, and with the direst result. When such fiendish cruelty is directed against men it is bad enough, but when practised on inoffensive and defenceless women and children, who had already undergone several months of the greatest mental torture conceivable, the imagination ceases to fancy anything more terrible, especially when enacted most wantonly, as on that occasion, and without any direct or indirect provocation. Our poor people were taken out of gaol, and led direct to the place of execution.

They had no idea of the fate awaiting them, and, by all accounts, they were pinioned and left on the ground; and then commenced the worst act of butchery, cold, calculated, determined slaughter, that perhaps was ever perpetrated; the imagination, as I have said, ceases to imagine anything more fearful—it was cruelty refined. There would appear, however, to have been no occasion for the precaution of pinioning, for the poor creatures were in no condition to escape, even if they had wished to do so. They had drunk the cup of misery to the dregs, and death was perhaps a thing more to be wished for, under their circumstances, than life itself, with all its attendant consequences. It is said of Mountstuart Jackson that he was carried to the place of execution on a charpoy, being so weak that he could not walk. Death to such people, situated as they were, carried few terrors, but such a death as they experienced must have carried fearful terror, such as slow but sure death always does, writhing under the agony of repeated wounds. The names of the two men as I ascertained on the ground were Bunde Hussun and Futteh Ali. The former was a short spare man, but with all the zeal of his religion, and evidently the greatest criminal of the two, and certainly the most energetic; for that was, I believe, proved at his trial; the latter was a large man; they had little or nothing to say, both mounted the scaffold at the same time. Bunde Hussun was a little behind; he repeated a few words of his creed, and called on the Mussulmans to be witnesses that he died a martyr to his religion; but there was no response. He was evidently much agitated, and terror was depicted in his face. He was a Mahomedan of the true type, and he shewed it to the last. The other man, Futteh Ali, was more dignified, and met his death calmly, as if it was an ordinary affair. The few minutes of suspense between the dropping of the platform, and the short but appropriate speech which Mr. Carnegy gave, was awful, it even affected the by-standers; what must have been the feelings of the culprits? but as they had earned it, it is possible they did not feel it. Thus perished two men, but for whose activity in bringing our captives to Lucknow from their safe hiding place they had every reasonable chance of escape; but the Mahomedan never allowed a Christian to escape, if he could possibly bring about his destruction. That is the great characteristic of the Mahomedans of Lucknow, and it will yet be their destruction.—Delhi Gazette.

EXECUTION OF RAJAH JAILALL SING.—I have just returned from witnessing the execution of Rajah Jailall or Jyeloll Singh, as his name is differently spelt. When I reached the place of execution I found two bodies of police sowars and two of police foot soldiers, drawn up on four sides of the fatal tree, thus forming a square. The criminal was already there under a guard of nujeebs, and I saw him seated, not saying a word, but every now and then surveying the gallows. He was a hard-featured man, with a short bushy beard, deep-sunk eyes, and connected eye-brows, which amongst natives is a sign of determination and revenge. His fetters had been taken off immediately on his arrival, but it was full half an hour or more before he was made to ascend the drop. He showed no symptoms of fear, but met his doom with seeming fortitude. He, however, protested against his sentence to the last, declared that he had nothing to do with the murder of the victims, but that his servants had, and that even then he had no control. Further also, he was ready to forfeit a lac or more of his fortune if his life were spared. To prove an alibi, he, however, declared he was with the rebel troops at the entrenchments opposite Alumbagh, fighting against General Outram. This fact alone rendered him liable to capital punishment as a leader of rebellion. The natives do not seem to understand the terms of the amnesty clearly, and put their own interpretation on the object and intent of that State document. When the noose was placed round Jyeloll Singh's neck and the cap drawn over his face, Mr. Carnegy, the deputy commissioner, addressed the natives in a few words to the effect how a couple of years ago, there stood on the very spot where the gallows was erected, a gateway (since demolished in the general local demolitions) which Jyeloll ascended to witness the death of certain ladies and gentlemen, whose execution he himself had instigated. That, by God's grace, retribution had overtaken the Rajah, and there he was to pay the penalty of his deeds on the identical site he selected to immolate his victims at the shrine of barbarity. So saying, he gave the signal, when the props were drawn away, the drop fell, and exhibited to the public gaze one of the richest talookdars, and most prominent instigators of the insurrection, expiating at the scaffold the murder of Christians. Several Europeans officers and members of the Christian community were assembled, but, comparatively speaking, only a small concourse of natives were present. This may be attributed either to their sympathy for the man, or to the distance of the city from the Kaiser Bagh, opposite one of the gates of which the execution took place—the early hour having also, no doubt, something to do with their absence.—Mofussilite.

REVENUE STATEMENT.—The Phoenix of the 11th October publishes the revenue statement addressed to Sir Charles Wood by the Government at Calcutta on the 30th September. The following is an abstract of the contents:—The current financial year ends on the 30th of April, 1860. The total deficit for this year is estimated at Rs. 6,49,99,811. This deficit is arrived at thus:—

ULTIMATE DEFICIT.
Revenue .. .. .	Rs.	87,58,78,051
Charges .. .. .	"	40,21,87,362
Deficit in India .. .. .	"	2,65,14,811
Add Home Charges .. .. .	"	3,84,85,500
Ultimate Deficit .. .. .	"	6,49,99,811

A "rough estimate" drawn up in May last, anticipates a larger deficiency than this, by the sum of Rs. 82,60,089. The reason of this difference is that the present calculation includes the sums expected to be raised by the new taxes. These are as follows:—

Increase of Salt duty .. .. .	Rs.	26,00,000
New Stamp Act .. .. .	"	5,00,000
Tax on Trades and Professions (less Rs. 3,50,000 Madras Murturpha tax repealed) .. .. .	"	46,50,000
		77,50,000

To this must be added some smaller items, of which particulars are not given, under the heads of reduction in military and public works charges, increase in custom duties under the new tariff, and of the opium pass duty in Bombay. During the year following (1860-61) Government are in hopes that further reductions will be made in the expenses to the amount of ninety and a half lacs, over and above those anticipated in the current year. These reductions will be chiefly in the commissariat charges, in the strength of her Majesty's home troops, in payments on account of passage money, and in mutiny charges, owing to the breaking up of the Bombay and Kamptee moveable columns, and the discharge of the naval brigades. At the same time the "new taxes" are to be more productive than in 1859-60, to the extent of Rs. 1,45,00,000. This will give a surplus of revenue over expenditure in India to the following amount:—

Revenue (1860-1) .. .. .	Rs.	88,90,25,000
Expenditure in India (do.) .. .. .	"	88,02,50,000
Surplus .. .. .	"	87,75,000

Against this surplus must be set the home charges, including the interest of the debt. These charges, augmented by Rs. 30,00,000 interest on new loans to be raised in London (say 50,00,000 sterling at five per cent., and 20,00,000 at four per cent.), amount to Rs. 4,23,71,800. This brings the balance over to the other side, and leaves an ultimate deficit for 1860-1 of Rs. 3,35,96,800. "The above results," say the Governor-general and two members of council by whom the paper is signed, "will, on the whole, we think, be considered satisfactory. They cannot, it is true, be counted as certain—much depends on the dates on which the new taxes can be brought into operation."

ration, and upon their productiveness." We may venture to add that something depends upon whether one of them—the tax on trades and professions—is ever brought into operation at all; a point which will materially affect its productiveness.

HYDER BUX, formerly Jail Darogah of Futtehpore, the supposed murderer of Mr. Tucker, late Judge of that district, and for whose apprehension a reward of Rs. 1,000 was offered, has been seized by the Oude Police of the Fyzabad district. Hyder Bux was followed up into the city of Goruckpore, where he was apprehended in a narrow lane, in a house near the butchers' quarters. Too much credit cannot be given to Lieutenant Sharpe, the District Commandant, for the activity and zeal displayed by him, whilst too little cannot be said of the want of such display on the part of the Goruckpore Police.

SIMLA, October 8.—Lord Clyde took his departure in the quietest manner possible yesterday morning at a very early hour, and Colonel Becher, Quarter-master-general, followed him this morning. Sir William and Lady Mansfield are still here, though it is expected that they will leave very shortly, en route to Bombay. Sir John Inglis has just passed through the station on his way to the hills north of Simla. He was accompanied by Lady Inglis. Though the weather is now delicious, pleasant and sunny during the day, the nights are very cold, and in the upper hills the climate is more extreme, and must be a very great and sudden change for those coming direct from the plains. Sir John Inglis remained a few days in Simla before continuing his journey. Mr. Barnes, our Commissioner, has been daily expected for the last week, but has not yet arrived. After listening to several cases which are waiting his investigation here he goes on to Bissahir to complete the arrangements he commenced for the tranquillity of that disturbed State in April last. Lieutenant-colonel Macpherson leaves shortly for Benares, having resigned his appointment of military secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. The Adjutant-General of the army left us some days ago, and the Head-quarter's office establishment will leave immediately. Thus we may fairly consider the "Season" of 1859 as having come to a close. Major Hatch, it is said, is to officiate for Colonel Keith Young as Judge Advocate-General, the latter being on the point of going home.

LORD CLYDE AT MEERUT.—The Commander-in-Chief arrived at Meerut at 2 A.M. on Tuesday morning, Oct. 11th, and took up his quarters at Messrs. David and Cox's Hotel. At sunrise the same morning her Majesty's 75th regiment paraded in full dress for the inspection of his Excellency, who shortly after seven o'clock came to the ground, attended by Major-general Bradford and all the divisional staff. He was received with a general salute, and immediately proceeded to the right of the line, from whence he passed along the front to the left. The regiment then broke into open column, and marched past in slow time, after which they were wheeled into line and advanced. Then the front being occupied with a concourse of carriages and fair equestrians, they passed to the rear from the right of companies, and after gaining same ground, front turned, and formed square on the leading division. Lord Clyde, who was in the centre of the square, then addressed the men as follows:—"Men of the 75th,—Your soldier-like bearing, your steadiness in the ranks, and your healthy, cheerful appearance, have impressed me greatly, and I congratulate you, one and all, on the high state of efficiency in which I find your regiment. Amongst you I see numbers of fine men and true soldiers; some old warriors who have fought their country's battles, and are ready to fight them again, some young soldiers filling the places of those fallen in fight, whose glory it is their's to emulate. To the former, I say, work on, for a man cannot become too perfect in his drill; to the latter, follow in your elder comrades' footsteps! Seldom, if ever, have I seen a regiment which gave me the idea of being more fit for hard work than the 75th, and, next month, when I am writing to the Duke of Cambridge, I shall tell him, that in case of any emergency arising, the 75th is one of the regiments most capable of meeting it. Still, do not think that you are perfect, and that now you may rest on your arms. Work at your drill with a hearty will, for, though British pluck combined with British discipline always has and always will overcome all odds, yet valour of the very highest order, when untaught, can be of no avail against the thoroughly disciplined forces of modern Europe." The regiment then reformed one-quarter distance column and deployed into line on number ten company, after which the line advanced with the most perfect steadiness for more than half a mile. It then halted, and facing about, marched to the rear for some distance, when it broke into column by file marching the proper left of companies. The companies closed on number ten on the march, and on arriving near the barracks were dismissed, the sun being pretty high in the heavens by that time. Lord Clyde then called the officers of the 75th to the front and thus addressed them:—"Gentlemen, I am extremely glad to congratulate you on the perfect state of your regiment, and still more, on the brotherly feeling, unanimity, and concord which have been reported to me to exist amongst you. These form the basis of all excellence in the interior economy of a regiment, for without the support of his officers the best commanding officer in the world can do nothing. Keep up this feeling; let nothing interrupt it; work, and work cheerfully towards the improvement of your regiment, and do your duty always, as now, in an earnest, loving spirit. So much was I delighted with this report of your brotherly concord, that I had intended to ask myself to dinner with you, but am obliged to forego that sincere pleasure on account of pressing business carrying me from Meerut to-day. God bless you all, and good bye." So saying, the fine old fellow jumped into his carriage, and was gone from our gaze like a beautiful dream. The Commander in Chief visited the Artillery School of Instruction and other places during the day, and in the afternoon his excellency started by dak for Agra, from whence we understand he will proceed to Gwalior before meeting the Governor general at Cawnpore."—Mofussilite.

BUCOLIC IMPROVEMENTS.—In May, 1855, the superintendent of the Hissar Cattle Farm, having intimated that he had twenty-three young bulls available for transfer, the late Lieutenant-Governor, Sir J. Lawrence, addressed the district officers of the Punjab, inquiring whether any such animals had been imported from Hindostan, and if so, with what success. The following was the result of these inquiries: During 1854 thirty bulls were imported into the Goojrat district. The total expenses were Rs. 665. Five of the bulls died, and the remainder were sold to zemindars in the different parts of the district at Rs. 30 each. The people generally had a prejudice against the bulls, they thought them too large. Two Hissar bulls were imported into Peshawur, but the experiment failed, and the same complaint was made as at Goojrat, that the bulls were too large. In Leia ten bulls were disposed of, but the zemindars evinced so slight an interest in the matter that the experiment was considered a failure. In the Trans-Sutlej States the zemindars stated that the bulls being so large required more food, and were not so handy for the Persian wheels and sugar mills. In Mooltan the few bulls imported were much thought of by the people, and preferred to the indigenous bulls, but still they would not purchase, on the ground of expense of keep. In the Lahore district the importation of the bulls was considered a desideratum, the breed of cattle in Sealkote and Goordaspore being very indifferent. The commissioner stated that he could find use for fifty young bulls, but recommended a small cess from the municipal funds for their keep, and the bulls could be sold as purchasers came forward. In the Cis-Sutlej States the zemindars would neither buy the bulls nor pay for their use. In April, 1859, the Secretary of the Agri-Horticultural Society was addressed on the subject, intimating that the experiment had hitherto proved a failure, and requesting that the society would take the subject into consideration, and make any suggestions likely to promote the object of improving the indigenous breed of cattle in the Punjab. In reply, the Secretary to the Agri-Horticultural Society stated there was, without doubt, a strong prejudice against the Hissar bulls, but that the importation might still answer if persevered in, for in some districts the people began to appreciate the bulls; but the society recommended the importation should be arranged for by Government, as the zemindars generally were unwilling to purchase; that it was very desirable, if possible, to obtain bulls of a middle size, less than that of the Hissar bulls, but still of a superior breed; that in the course of the Autumn a large cattle fair will be held at Sirsa, and some qualified person might be deputed there to purchase bulls for importation into the Punjab. A circular on the subject has been addressed to all district officers, directing them to ascertain if the zemindars are willing to purchase animals of a middle size, and of a superior breed, all expenses of transport, &c., being borne by Government; and in the event of the answer proving favourable, arrangements will be made for a good supply. The cattle in the Punjab are small, ill bred, and poor, and much advantage would be derived by crossing the breed with the finer animals of the North West.—Delhi Gazette.

AN AMIABLE ORDER.—The following document, found in the possession of Jyellol Sing, was evidently written after the Nana's arrival at Lucknow, as it corresponds with a similar order issued at Cawnpore on the Nana's return at the head of the rebel sepoys:—"As we are appointed, and our desire is to give peace and security to all our subjects, it is our will and pleasure that all the tribe of English Kaffirs be exterminated from our country, old and new; consequently, Benec Madho is appointed to Jounpore and Azingurh; and it is ordered that you aid the said Rajah in murdering, and seizing, and exterminating that tribe in such manner that not a sign of them be left, and obey Benec Madho in all things, and it shall be for your advantage."

COTTON CULTIVATION.—A few months since, Mr. L. Berkeley, ex-assistant commissioner at Delhi, who is an excellent horticulturist, thoroughly understands the culture of American cotton, and considers it in every way superior to the cotton indigenous to the Delhi district, was desirous of experimenting to a small extent, and applied to Government for an advance of Rs. 500 for the purchase of seed, &c. Mr. Berkeley was very sanguine of the trial proving successful. He estimated the highest cost of production would be Rs. 8 per maund, and that a ready sale could be found at Liverpool at 7½d. per lb., or Rs. 25 a maund. As a proof that he had not underestimated the cost of production, he mentioned that cotton-growers sold their produce at the rate of six rupees per maund, which price of course represented not only the cost of rearing the staple, but also profits of the growers. The Financial Commissioner, in recommending his sanction to the advance solicited, was not so sanguine of success as he had seen American cotton grown on a large scale in Bundelcund, the results from which were not very satisfactory. The Lieutenant-governor doubted the utility of making the advance required, especially as Government had already spent lakhs in trying to stimulate the culture of cotton, so referred the matter to the Horticultural Society at Lahore, who were of opinion that at the present time it was not worth while to make grants to individuals; that the possibility of growing American cotton in the Punjab was undoubted, and that the experiment, if successful, would only demonstrate that possibility, and not the success of the general introduction of the cotton. The Lieutenant-governor concurred in the views expressed by the society, and sanction to the advance was consequently declined.

ALLAHABAD, Sept. 29.—The celebrated Hickmut-oollah Khan, ex-Deputy Collector of Futteypoor, is now here, standing his trial. Captain Gowan is prosecutor on the part of Government. The accused is charged with being a leader and instigator of rebellion at Futteypoor, as well as with having taken part in the murder of Mr. Tucker, the lamented Judge of that station. The evidence of Mr. Sherer, who was magistrate of Futteypoor in June, 1857, and that of Pandit Amr Nath, the then Tehseeldar, have been taken. Mr. Sherer, having left the district at the commencement of disturbance in the city, cannot of course say from personal observation to what extent Hickmut-oollah was concerned in the events that followed his departure; but the evidence of Amr Nath is more to the purpose, as he professes to have been an eyewitness of the scenes of violence he describes. The trial is being conducted by the Judge of Allahabad, Mr. W. P. Masson. His appointment is a special one, and both Europeans and natives are of opinion that a better choice could not have been made.—Delhi Gazette.

SIR PROBY CAUTLEY has placed an annual cadetship at the disposal of the Thomason College at Roorkee. The cadetship will be conferred upon the student of the English class of the first department passing, at the annual examination, the standard prescribed for the college certificate, who shall have attained the highest proficiency, both in the professional studies pursued at the college and in the subjects of examination, laid down as the test of qualification for cadets in her Majesty's Indian army. The first of these cadetships will be bestowed at the next annual examination in August, 1860.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN D'OYLEY.—It is with deep regret that we learn the death of Captain G. F. D'Oyley, late deputy commissioner of Tounghoo. He died of cholera shortly after his arrival at his station. Captain D'Oyley was attached to the 67th Bengal Native Infantry, and joined the Pegu commission shortly before his regiment left the province. As deputy commissioner at Tounghoo, and when officiating at Prome, he has always given the greatest satisfaction. He has been deservedly popular in his several districts, and it is painful to think that so promising an officer should have been thus prematurely cut off in the early part of his career. His persevering efforts among the Kareens will long be remembered by that grateful and interesting race, and his loss will be much felt by the American missionaries, who have always found in him the hand of help. The commissioner loses in him an upright and Godfearing judge.—Rangoon Times.

MR. NORMAND.—It is with feelings of deep regret that we announce the sudden death of Mr. Normand, of the East India Railway, Resident Engineer, in charge of the Jumna Bridge works. He had been complaining, we understand for some days, although he had not called in medical aid, and on the 27th September, he had several fits, in one of which he died. Mr. Normand's loss will be much felt by the Railway Company, as he had the credit of being a thoroughly practical, hard-working engineer. While the wells, on which the foundation of the great bridge are to be built, were being sunk last hot season, Mr. Normand was on the works night and day. In fact he slept at night close to the coolie gangs, and used to get up in order to inspect their work every two or three hours. So also the heat of the day did not prevent his making regular visits to his various working gangs.—Commercial Gazette.

CLERK OF THE COURT.—The Lieutenant-governor of the Punjab has sanctioned, as an experiment, the appointment, in selected districts, of a judicial officer, to be called the "Clerk of the Court." The office has already been instituted in Oude, and great benefit is expected to result from it there, as well as in the Punjab. The duties of the office are somewhat similar to those performed by clerks of the courts in England. The clerk will be the direct medium of communication between the judge and the principals in the case at issue; thus doing away with the necessity for employing the present number of native officials. He will prepare cases for the judge, arrange depositions, and in many ways relieve the presiding officer of a mass of details, over which at present his time is frittered away. Success must in a great measure depend on the character of the first incumbents, and on the degree of supervision exercised over them. They are to be Europeans or East Indians, with a thorough knowledge of the vernacular, able to read and write their own orders. Occasionally a native, competent for the post, may, it is thought, be found, but many exceptions to the general disqualification are not expected to present themselves. The salary of the appointment is to be not less than Rs. 200 per mensem, and is to be met eventually by reduction in the numbers of the Amlah. The Judicial Commissioner has been instructed to report the result of the experiment after three months of its working.

DELHI, October 11.—The Commander in Chief arrived here on the 10th, and after a brief halt, during which his lordship looked at the artillery and the infantry, proceeded on his journey towards Cawnpore. It is Lord Clyde's intention to visit every station where there are troops, en route. The 16th irregular cavalry resumed their march on the 10th inst., and are to be at Sekundrabad to-morrow, the 12th.

MURREE, October 9.—Yesterday was laid the foundation stone of the Lawrence Asylum at Murree by Sir Robert Montgomery. The spot selected is a beautiful one, but on account of the hardness of the road, and the distance from the station, many did not go; yet there was a good number. Rev. Dr. Carshore read the prayers, which were written for the occasion; then followed the ceremony, Sir Robert Montgomery laying the foundation. He also, in a short speech, explained the objects of the institution, &c., &c., and received three hearty cheers and one more from the soldiers and gentlemen present.

"NORTON'S LAW OF EVIDENCE" has been prescribed as one of the test-books for candidates at the annual examination of Assistant and Extra Assistant Commissioners in the Punjab provinces.

MESSRS. COPE & Co., the Umritsur merchants, lately applied to Government to be exempted from the payment of duty on flax intended for exportation to England. The Governor-general has sanctioned the indulgence for a period of two years, in respect to all Punjab-grown flax, on the understanding that the exportation is to be limited to the port of Kurrachee. His Lordship has intimated, however, that the exemption will not be extended beyond the two years.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, although he left Meerut with the intention of visiting Agra, changed his mind on reaching Allyghur, from which place he proceeded direct to Cawnpore, in compliance, it is said, with a message from the Governor-general, who had arranged to reach that station on the 17th, so that as Lord Clyde left Allyghur on the morning of the 15th, he and Lord Canning would reach Cawnpore on the same day.

MR. AITCHESON, the personal assistant to the Judicial Commissioner, one of the competition men of but four or five years' standing, has been appointed Under Secretary to the Government of India. He is said to have no interest, and to have obtained the appointment by merit alone.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL and suite arrived at Allahabad on the 14th Oct. They were met at the Bridge of Boats, shortly after five o'clock, by Major Haslewood, A.D.C., and Captain Prinsep, private secretary, with two of the lieutenant governor's carriages. The party then proceeded to Government House, and after dinner, a special train being in readiness, Lord Canning proceeded on to Cawnpore. This was at half-past nine o'clock. Mr. Thornhill proceeded in the same carriage with the Governor-general, whose own party consisted of Major General Birch; Messrs. Beadon, Bowring, and Simpson; Captains Jones and Hills, A.D.C.s; and Dr. Beal. Lady Canning was to arrive on Sunday, the 16th, and proceed on by special train to Cawnpore a few hours afterwards, accompanied by Captains Baring and Stanley, A.D.C.s.

DR. JAMESON, the Superintendent Botanical Gardens, N.W.P., has submitted the following statement, showing the quantity of teas prepared in the Government factories during the season of 1858:—Fine black teas: Souchong, 1,695 lbs.; Pouchong, 18,961; green teas, 1,424. Second class black teas: Bohea, 6,520 lbs. Total, 28,060 lbs.

MADRAS.*MISCELLANEOUS.

MADRAS CENSUS.—It appears from the annual report of the Madras Board of Revenue for the year 1857-58, that the Presidency of Madras contains 52,000 villages and 36,000 hamlets; and that the total population amounts to 23,000,000. The number of houses, exclusive of the city of Madras, is about 4,500,000; and estimating the population of the city at 700,000, we get an average of something like five persons to each house. Of the 52,000 villages, 16,000 are Zemindary, and 36,000 are Government villages. The Government villages include 26,000 Ryotwar, but 6,000 others, which are called "rented," ought to be included under the head of Ryotwar. Thus it might be said that the presidency includes 32,000 Ryotwar villages, 16,000 Zemindary villages, 4,000 Shotreim and Inam, and about 200 odd ones, which are Amany, Moturpha, or uninhabited.

MURDER OF CAPT. LEYCESTER.—The Madras Times has obtained from Walthair some additional particulars regarding the death of Capt. Leycester. It appears that he was shot through the head while asleep in his cot, at about 11 o'clock on the night of the 28th of September. Death, it is said, must have been instantaneous, for the ball passed right through his brain, and when he was found the following morning by his servants, who reported the sad occurrence to Captain Mason, there was not the slightest trace of suffering upon his countenance. His murderer is supposed to be a Mahomedan peon, who had the use of his double-barrelled gun on the day before the murder was committed, and a cartridge and caps precisely similar to those employed in the murder were found on the person of the suspected man. The motive which actuated the wretch to commit this foul deed is as yet unknown. No theft was attempted, as far as can be ascertained. All the plate was found in the morning untouched, and there is no reason to think that any money was taken. The peon, who is described as a "cut-throat looking villain," must have crept softly up to the cot and discharged the gun within a few inches of his master's head, and, curiously enough, the murderer, in putting down the gun in the next room, let off the second barrel accidentally, and the ball, after striking the roof, rolled on the floor, and was found the following morning.

LIEUTENANT AND ADJUTANT W. R. ROUND, of the 10th Madras native infantry, has been cashiered on the following charge:—"Charge.—For scandalous conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances:—First Instance.—In having, at Secunderabad, on or about the 13th June, 1859, forwarded, or caused to be forwarded, to the acting assistant adjutant general Hyderabad subsidiary forces, to meet a debt due by him to Messrs. Winter and Company, tailors, of Madras, a native order or hoondie, which he well knew had previously been paid on his account, and which he had obtained from Callapah Soucar, the party in whose possession it was, by deceitfully stating to him he merely wanted to examine the hoondie to see if it had been correctly paid. Second instance: In having, at the same place, in an official letter to the officer commanding the 10th regiment of native infantry, dated the 12th of June, 1859, willfully and falsely stated that the native order, or hoondie, referred to in the first instance of the charge, had been by mistake forwarded to Rangoon, and had been received back from thence only the evening before, whereas, in fact, the hoondie had never been forwarded to Rangoon, as he well knew." The court-martial sat at Secunderabad on the 15th of August.

THE TODAS.—On the 7th September, we learn from a Madras contemporary, Mr. Thomas, Collector of Coimbatore, reported to the Madras Government a renewal of Toda sacrifices during funerals, attended with cruelty and brutality. The Todas of the Neigherries are accustomed to slaughter a large number of buffaloes on each occasion of a death among their number. The practice is to kill them by a lingering death. Mr. Thomas had once prevailed upon them to consent to the gradual abolition of the custom, and they voluntarily agreed to submit to a fine if they broke their promise. They did break it, and were fined; but they petitioned against the penalty, and the fine was remitted under orders from the Madras Government. Taking advantage of this circumstance, on the 16th of September, two deaths having occurred, twelve buffaloes were sacrificed in the usual way. Mr. Thomas has been instructed to inform the leading men among the Todas that although the Government remitted the fine which had been imposed upon them, they regarded the practice with the same disapprobation as before, and expected that they would at least confine themselves to sacrificing two animals on each occasion, and would put them at once out of pain.

THE DISCHARGED EUROPEANS.—"The Governor-general," says the Madras Times, "has telegraphed" to Sir Charles Trevelyan, stating that it is necessary that the discharged soldiers who were on the point of sailing be detained—the bounty being 50 rupees. Further details will be sent from Cawnpore relative to enlistment for China."

SIR CHARLES TREVELYAN returned to Madras on the 14th October, from a tour in the provinces.

BOMBAY.*OUR RAILWAYS.

We are informed that there is every prospect of the extension of the Great Indian Peninsular Railway to Sholapoor about the middle of next year. In November, it is said, the Deccan line will be opened from Deeksal to Barsee Road. The viaduct over the Seena River is rapidly progressing, and great energy is shown in completing the details of the work.

The progress of our railways is closely connected with every scheme that has in view the welfare of the people and the advancement of the most important interests of the country. The introduction of the railway into Bombay at once gave a value to landed property in the island never before possessed, and gave employment to unskilled labour heretofore dependent on fugitive circumstances. The further the railway has been pushed into the Mofussil, incalculable advantages have been derived by the poor of the country; they who had hitherto lived by the tillage of the soil, or the management of cattle—now suffering from drought and by pestilence, and by any and every accident of time, place, and circumstances, but who had never realised a farthing in any other way—at once found a market for their labour, left their lands and flocks to women and children, and delighted in the work of the Indian navy; resulting in a drain upon the decimal silver coinage, which must soon call for fresh work for the mint to supply the untold amount withdrawn by this means from circulation. At this moment, it is said, the different lines of railway under construction in this part of the Presidency give employment to sixty thousand labourers, earning on an average from five to ten rupees a month. What were their previous compared with present means?—what the result of the latter?—and into what channel diverted?—are questions of no little importance in their bearing on the social condition of these labourers.

Let us take a glance at the Company's works, as they are familiarly called, in this island. Entering in by Nesbit lane, Byculia, the first object that arrests attention is the stores, with everything arranged with the nicety and precision maintained in an apothecary's shop, and where may be found, in nautical phraseology, "anything from a needle to a sheet-anchor." Around are scattered the Plutonic upheavings of the factories of Leeds, Sheffield, and Birmingham—monster engines and monster pipes; monster rails, bolts, and nuts, such as will be found nowhere else through the length and breadth of the island. Further on we enter upon the Locomotive department, and pass through one vast smithing and coach-building establishment, showing labour in every possible form, and a thousand men so engaged; here, too, where machinery endeavours to supersede manual labour. As a training school to the native it must induce important consequences; but supposing this were not within the pale of possibility for various reasons, still the profitable employment thus afforded to large bodies of workmen is due to the railway. And here, more than anywhere else, the value of artisans is being duly experienced and improved upon.

It were needless, in this cursory notice, to enter into elaborate detail, to show how extensively native agency finds employment in different departments of the railway. On the opened line between Bombay, Wassind, and Campolee we see natives chiefly employed as station-masters, and wholly so in all menial capacities. With the extension of these lines, the demand for labour has increased, new depots and stores throwing open a wider field of work.

These are not the only arguments that might be brought forward to show how abundantly the railway has blessed the Indian community, and how much cause there is for thankfulness on their part for its introduction into the country. Doubtless there are sections of that community who will carp and deny the value of the railway for anything at all; but the sober and the sensible, as well as those who have interests at stake, will think otherwise. Will it be said that the railway will do nothing for those vast tracts of country now only partially cultivated by cotton, indigo, sugar, and other produce, and where quantities of that cultivation rot for want of carriage? Will it be nothing for the poor of the interior to get their salt from the coast for an almost fabulous price compared to what they now pay?

The advantages of railway communication, everywhere abundant, are emphatically so in respect of India. A railway station soon becomes a centre of life and movement. Within its immediate radii pulses go quicker, time beats more regularly,—there, if anywhere, are action, vitality, and progress. As a builder of towns, the railway is a most beneficent as well as a most fertile power. In England its social influences are widely and intensely felt; of what it can do for the arts, and especially for architecture, we may seek illustration in such places as Ghent, Heidelberg, Milan, Leghorn, and other towns on the Continent.—Bombay Gazette.

MISCELLANEOUS.

AHMEDNUGGUR, 19th October.—I have delayed informing you of the popular feeling here, in the expectation that there would have been something tangible to write about; but as yet nothing further has transpired than closing shops, stopping all supplies to Europeans from the Petta, and a strike among all artisans working in the European establishments, and a decided and most unmistakeable aversion to the near approach of Europeans. It appears that of nine tanks in the Petta, amongst a population of thirty thousand, one was set apart for the use of missionaries and converts; another for the lower castes; whilst the Ban-yans and Brahmans had the lion's share to their own cheek. The converts, however, emboldened by their own interpretation of the proclamation, have of late helped themselves from either tank. The Collector to whom the matter was referred decided that the tanks, being public property, were open in common to all castes, creeds, and professions; and a further appeal to Government has only elicited the same answer. On Sunday a general bad feeling prevailed in the native town; shops, with the exception of the Parsees', were all closed, and not a particle of vegetable could be procured. Hajams were waylaid and driven back from their usual attendance, and an attempt was made to close the communication between the Petta and the camp. On Monday the workmen of the public works and barrack department were not allowed to attend at their usual place of business. A deputation of the more respectable class waited on Colonel Pottinger, as they appear to have lost all confidence in the collector, whom they style the missionaries' man. I have not heard what transpired; but it is evident that the natives are willing to be ruled by one whom they know to be a fierce soldier, rather than by the mild civilian. Mr. Tytler, no one will deny, has been too hasty in his decision. If the wells that have for years past been permitted to be used by particular sects only are to be thrown open to the public, timely warning of the change should have been given, to enable those who would not allow their women to mix at wells with those of lower caste to provide tanks for themselves. A warning of one month would have become the dignity of the British Government.—Bombay Times.

ABSORPTION OF THE LOCAL ARMY.—We (Bombay Times) are told on authority which we hardly feel at liberty to doubt, that instructions were received from home by the last mail, to commence the immediate absorption of the local army, by attaching the European regiments forthwith, as second battalions, to the Queen's. The news is so startling, and wholly unexpected, in view of the determination with which the Parliament broke up, that we find it as difficult to believe the fact as to doubt the sufficiency of the source from which it comes to us. We are told further, that the native army is to pass forthwith under the immediate control of the Horse Guards, with a view, as is supposed, to its being eventually incorporated with the Royal army also.

GOA EXHIBITION.—Viscount des Torres, the Governor-general of the Portuguese dominions in India, seems an enterprising character. About five weeks ago he gave the Roman Catholics of the metropolis an invitation to a treat which is to last from the 2nd December to the 1st January, 1860. During that period "the body of Saint Francis Xavier, the Apostle of India, will be exposed at Goa for public veneration." We do not expect that many of the Roman Catholics of Calcutta will take a trip to Goa for the sake of merely looking at the corpse of this renowned missionary, as the corpse has been seen through a glass case since the time that a devout lady bit off one of the toes. Possibly if a piece of his hair or a minute paring of one of his nails was given to each one who made a pilgrimage to Goa a considerable number of devotees would undertake the journey. But his Excellency intends to spread another feast, and, if we are not much mistaken, the number of guests will far exceed those who accept the previous invitation. From the 29th January to the 5th February the Goa Exhibition will be opened to the public. Contributions from other parts of India are solicited—natural productions, animal, vegetable and mineral; manufactures of various kinds, useful and ornamental; poetry, music, &c. Articles designed for the exhibition can be forwarded to the care of a commissioner resident in Bombay. A pavilion will be constructed for the exhibition—a Crystal Palace in miniature, we presume—the cost of which, with other expenses as well as the prizes, will be defrayed by Government. It is somewhat remarkable that before an exhibition has taken place in the mother country one should be designed in one of the poorest and most insignificant of the Portuguese Colonies. We commend his excellency the Governor general for taking the initiative, and we wish him and his coadjutors every success.—Hurkaru.

THE BEYT EXPEDITION.—It seems that the fortress of Beyt was not stormed, as we announced, but was evacuated by its garrison on the night of the 6th October, the attempt to carry it during the day having failed from the breach being impracticable, and the scaling ladders too short. The force arrived off the island on the morning of the 3rd October. On the 4th, the boats, under the command of Lieutenant Chitty, cut out the native craft lying in shore, and the squadron came into position on the south side of the fort. The bombardment began on the morning of the 5th, within 800 yards of the fort, and lasted throughout the day; the Ferooz, Victoria, Zenobia, Clyde, and Constance between them, pouring in a terrific storm of shot and shell. A breach was declared practicable the next morning, and the storming party, consisting of detachments of the royal artillery, sappers and miners, H.M. 28th foot, marine battalion, and 6th regiment N.I., landed under cover of the guns about two o'clock. No casualty occurred in landing, although the enemy kept up a brisk fire of musketry upon the troops. But the breach was found impracticable and the scaling ladders useless, from the height of the walls. The men of the 28th and the 6th N.I. were consequently exposed to a galling fire of musketry from the walls, which had been extensively loopholed for the purpose. The face of the wall, which had been destroyed by the bombardment, was protected with a chevaux de frise of prickly pear, and it was wisely resolved to withdraw the troops from the position in which they were placed, and to recommence the bombardment. At this juncture a white flag was hung out from the fort, and Ragoo Shamjee, the Bombay milliner, who has been unlucky enough to fall into the Wagheers' hands, was seen approaching as an ambassador. He came from the garrison with an offer to surrender the fort, upon condition of their being transported with their arms across the Gulf to Mandavee. Col. Donovan seems to have returned a short answer, to the effect that he would treat only with the Chief in person, when that worthy at last showed himself, but to repeat the former proposal. He was told that upon laying down their arms the garrison would be allowed to leave the fort without molestation, and not approving the stipulation, the chief returned to the fort. The flag was hauled down, and the firing recommenced, and soon after dark the enemy is supposed to have evacuated the place. Upon taking possession the next day it was a marvel to the observer that the garrison had so long sustained the terrible fire poured into the place. The body of the chief, who must have fallen soon after the recommencement of hostilities, was found amid heaps of dead. The fort is said to be amazingly strong; the walls are earthwork, of from 18 to 40 feet thick, and 30 to 40 feet high.—Bombay Gazette.

NATIVE ENTERPRISE.—The native merchants who have purchased the steamers Bombay Castle and United Service of the late Mercantile Steam Navigation Company have started a new Company, styled the "China Mercantile Navigation Company." Both these steamers will ply between Bombay and China, calling at intermediate stations, as they used to do while in the service of the late Company.

POONA.—Among the military changes, and by all accounts they are not a few, that are shortly about to be made in the Poona division of the army, we are informed that the depot of instruction and the head-quarters of the artillery of both armies, royal and Indian of this presidency, are to be established at Poona. Six complete batteries of field-pieces are in future always to be kept ready here for immediate service in case of an emergency occurring. Ahmednuggur is to become a permanent station for the head-quarters of a dragoon regiment, and we understand three regiments of British dragoons will henceforth be the complement for the Bombay Presidency, in place of one as heretofore prior to the rebellion. The ultimatum, too, for the turning of the first sod of the foundation of a formidable fort near the Sungum, to contain, exclusive of the garrison, 2,000 non-combatants, is expected to be made before the present year closes.—Poona Observer.

The Victoria Cross.

WAR OFFICE, Nov. 11.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her intention to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross on the undermentioned officers, non-commissioned officers, and private soldiers of her Majesty's army, whose claims to the same have been submitted for her Majesty's approval, on account of acts of bravery performed by them in India, as recorded against their several names; viz.:

86th Regiment (now of the 19th Regiment).—Capt. (now Brevet major) Henry Edward Jerome—For conspicuous gallantry at Jhansi, on the 3rd of April, 1858, in having, with the assistance of Private Byrne, removed, under a very heavy fire, Lieut. Sewell, of the 86th regiment, who was severely wounded, at a very exposed point of the attack upon the fort; also, for gallant conduct at the capture of the fort of Chandairee, the storming of Jhansi, and in action with a superior rebel force on the Jumna, on the 28th of May, 1858, when he was severely wounded.

72nd Regiment.—Lieut. Aylmer Spicer Cameron—For conspicuous bravery on the 30th of March, 1858, at Kotah, in having headed a small party of men, and attacked a body of armed fanatic rebels, strongly posted in a loopholed house, with one narrow entrance. Lieut. Cameron stormed the house and killed three rebels in single combat. He was severely wounded, having lost half of one hand by a stroke from a tulwar.

Royal Engineers.—Corporal Michael Sleavon—For determined bravery at the attack of the fort of Jhansi, on the 3rd of April, 1858, in maintaining his position at the head of a sap, and continuing the work under a heavy fire, with a cool and steady determination worthy of the highest praise.

Royal Artillery.—Bombardier Joseph Brennan—For marked gallantry at the assault of Jhansi, on the 3rd of April, 1858, in bringing up two guns of the Hyderabad Contingent, manned by natives, lying each under a heavy fire from the walls, and directing them so accurately as to compel the enemy to abandon his battery.

34th Regiment.—Private George Richardson—At Kewanee, Trans-Gogra, on the 27th of April, 1859, for determined courage in having, although severely wounded—one arm being disabled—closed with and secured a rebel spy armed with a loaded revolver.

95th Regiment.—Private Bernard McQuirt—For gallant conduct on the 6th of January, 1858, at the capture of the entrenched town of Kowa, when he was severely and dangerously wounded in a hand-to-hand fight with three men, of whom he killed one and wounded another. He received five sabre cuts and a musket shot in this service.

86th Regiment.—Private James Byrne—For gallant conduct on the 3rd of April, 1858, at the attack of the fort of Jhansi, in carrying Lieut. Sewell, who was lying badly wounded, to a place of safety, under a very heavy fire, assisted by Capt. Jerome, in the performance of which act he was wounded by a sword-cut.

71st Regiment.—Private George Rodgers—For daring conduct at Marar, Gwalior, on the 16th of June, 1858, in attacking by himself a party of seven rebels, one of whom he killed. This was remarked as a valuable service, the party of rebels being well armed and strongly posted in the line of advance of a detachment of the 71st regiment.

Flogging in the Army.

GENERAL ORDERS.

HORSE GUARDS, S.W., Nov. 9.

His Royal Highness the General Commanding in Chief having had occasion lately to remark on the unequal estimate of crime and allotment of punishment by courts-martial, especially as regards corporal punishment, has taken this important subject under his anxious consideration, with a view to amendment and correction. With this object he has decided upon establishing a classification of soldiers, for the purpose of maintaining a distinction between the classes as regards liability to corporal punishment.

All men on entering the army will be placed in the first class, and will not, except for aggravated mutinous conduct, be liable to corporal punishment. They will continue in the first class, unless they should incur degradation into the second class by the commission of certain crimes hereafter specified. For this purpose his Royal Highness has further decided on classifying the offences committed by soldiers under two distinct heads. Crimes under the first head are to be the following:—

Absence from parade.

Drunkenness.

Riotous conduct in the streets.

Absence without leave from tattoo.

Preferring frivolous complaints.

Disrespect to non-commissioned officers.

Striking a comrade.

Absence without leave, as defined by 51 Art. of War.

Escaping from confinement.

Insubordination.

Making away with necessaries.

Falsely imputing improper conduct to a superior.

Sleeping on post, depending on the circumstances or nature of the service.

Crimes under the second head are to be the following:—

Desertion.

Mutinous conduct.

Aggravated cases of insubordination and violence.

Drunkenness on duty or on line of march.

Embezzling public money.

Stealing from a comrade.

Theft.

Designedly maiming.

Repeated acts of making away with necessaries, arms, accoutrements, ammunition, &amp;c.

Other disgraceful acts showing vicious or unnatural propensities, indecent assaults.

No man guilty of offences under the first head is to be subject to corporal punishment, except during time of war, when the army is in the field.

Men guilty of offences under the second head, being crimes of a very serious description, will, if in the second class, be liable to corporal punishment. If, however, they are in the first class, they will, together with their other punishment, not being corporal punishment, be disgraced, and passed into the second class, when they will henceforth, on the repetition of crimes under the second head, be liable to corporal punishment, as having degraded themselves by their own bad conduct.

Uninterrupted good conduct for a year will, however, again restore the soldier from the second to the first class, as proving a desire for reformation and amendment.

Though thus classified, it does not follow that all men under the second class are to be condemned to corporal punishment.

Each case is to be decided upon its own merits, and corporal punishment as much avoided as possible; but a man who by misconduct has placed himself in the second class is liable thereafter to corporal punishment, whereas the man in the first class is not liable to such punishment except in the case of aggravated mutinous conduct, when severity must at once be resorted to to repress more serious mischief resulting from such conduct.

H.R.H. trusts that the above classification will greatly simplify to the officers of the army the method of dealing with crime; will deter the evil-disposed from committing offences justly subjecting them to severe punishment, which, though necessary to maintain discipline, should be restricted as much as possible; and will give confidence to the good soldier by securing to him, on entering her Majesty's service, an immunity from degrading punishment, which immunity it will be in his power to preserve to the day when his engagement shall expire.

By command of H.R.H. the Gen. C. in C.
G. A. WETHERALL, Adj. gen.

DELHI PRIZE MONEY.

It has been oftentimes jocosely remarked, that, of all kinds of funding, refunding is the worst. Such certainly appears to be the opinion of the Indian Government, if, at least, it may be judged by its acts in default of any very precise profession of financial faith. Upwards of two years have now elapsed since this country was electrified by the news of the capture of Delhi, and of the heroic three days' struggle within its walls. At that time there were no bounds to the enthusiasm of public gratitude, so far as it could be expressed by words. Eulogistic epithets were lavishly bestowed on "the army of Delhi," from the general in command to the youngest drummer-boy. All were heroes, and all equally entitled to the highest honours and most substantial rewards at the disposal of a gracious and powerful sovereign and a grateful and wealthy nation. This was two years ago. Let us now briefly sum up the great things that have since been done for that small but valiant band whose dauntless courage and unflinching endurance stemmed the overflowing tide of rebellion, and restored the British supremacy in the Upper Provinces of India. At home a few honorary distinctions were sparingly and tardily conferred, and then the affair was forgotten, and all public interest transferred to the garrison and relieving army of Lucknow. This, however, was not surprising, for the people of England have never felt heartily interested in Indian affairs beyond a fortnight after receiving intelligence of some great victory at a place with an unpronounceable name; or, if they again recurred to the event, it was to condemn the war as iniquitous, and to brand the Court of Directors as a nest of "Filibusters." We have no right, therefore, to marvel that the capture of Delhi should have been thrust out of the way, as it were, into a pigeon hole, together with such obsolete reminiscences as the sieges of Blunderbore or of Seringapatam. But surely, it will be said, the Indian Government must have been deeply grateful for the immeasurable service rendered by the fall of the Imperial City, for none could so well understand the real significance of that memorable exploit. Let the acts of that Government, then, be taken as the fairest exponent of its gratitude, and, consequently, of its appreciation of the true merits of that great feat of arms. Its first proceeding was to grant six months' batta to the victorious army, as if in lieu of prize money. Such, indeed, was not its intention, but the general order on the occasion was couched in such harsh, unfeeling, inconsiderate terms, that it was understood by the officers as well as by the men to set aside their claims to any further pecuniary advantages. After the lapse of a very unnecessary interval of time, and after much disappointment had been experienced and ill-feeling engendered, the Government coldly explained that as a matter of form the question of prize money must first be referred to the Crown. Prize agents, however, had been appointed by Sir Archibald Wilson, and, finally, the handsome amount of £400,000 was actually realised. As some little time must elapse before the Prize Roll could be made out, and each man's share exactly determined, and, above all, as the public treasury was at a very low ebb, the Government was good enough to borrow this sum till called for, engaging at the same time to pay at the rate of five per cent. per annum for the use of the money. The Prize Roll, we believe, has long since been completed and sent in, but the Government pays no heed to the claim. The £400,000 from Delhi have sunk into that quicksand of mismanagement which has swallowed up the revenues of India, the forfeited wealth of convicted rebels, and loans from this country. The insatiable maw of the Dragon of Wantley was as nothing compared with the reckless expenditure of a feeble and improvident ruler. But how much longer is a state of things to be endured fraught with so much present disgrace and so much future disaster? Are the claims of those brave soldiers who won Delhi and saved India by the fearless exposure of their lives to be overlooked and disregarded, in order that an incompetent and time-serving governor may strut in peacock state through the provinces so nearly lost by his vacillation, and for the preservation of which he is indebted to those very men whose money he has squandered on truckling natives, and whose services he has slighted and ignored? Not content with jeopardising an empire, he has since deprived the State of an army of ten thousand soldiers, who can little be spared at the present moment; and these greater offences against the public weal he culminates by delaying compensation to the sufferers by the mutiny, and by withholding the prize-money due to those by whom that mutiny was mainly suppressed. When Parliament again assembles for the despatch of business these questions cannot fail to be brought before the House; and then justice, however tardy, will, we trust, be meted out to all with equal hand.

MILITARY CANTONMENTS IN INDIA.*

ACCORDING to the evidence adduced before the Committee appointed to inquire into the re-organisation of the Indian army it appears that in the course of forty years, from 1815 to 1855, the mortality among the European troops, exclusive of casualties, amounted to 100,000 men, "the greater portion of whose lives might have been preserved had better localities been selected for the military occupation of that country." This wholesale homicide is attributed to the old system of stationing European troops near populous towns without reference to sanitary considerations. Years ago, perhaps, it may have been really necessary to overawe the native population by the immediate vicinity of English soldiers, and the necessity of doing so will probably continue until more rapid means of transit and communication have been widely established. But wherever railways have been opened, or are positively in progress, the question of salubrity may fairly be taken into account in precedence of all others. There can be no excuse, for instance, for the selection of Delhi, Allahabad, Cawnpore, and Lucknow, as great military stations, in the teeth of all scientific knowledge and experience. The climate of the last-named city, we are assured, is similar to that of Cawnpore, "the most fatal in the North-West Provinces;" while Fyzabad and the stations beyond the Gogra are far more congenial to the European constitution, and range "with the more temperate climates of the eastern plains." There may be valid strategic reasons for placing the position of Allahabad beyond all chance of a coup de main; but this might be effected by the presence of artillery, and a few gun-boats especially constructed for Indian rivers. Within one hundred and fifty miles are the elevated table-lands and plains of Sahagpore, "presenting fine temperate climates, and abounding in natural resources." Excellent coal has been found here, and there is every reason to believe that these beautiful highlands are well fitted for the residence of Europeans, whether soldiers or industrious settlers. Delhi, again, has long been notorious for its fevers, and, if the walls were everywhere levelled with the ground, might advantageously be abandoned in favour of Meerut, a healthy station sufficiently near at hand to keep in check even a fanatical populace unprovided with artillery, ammunition, and rifles. With regard to Cawnpore, we cannot imagine that the importance at present attached to it will be of lengthened duration. For the moment it is the key of Oude, but it is also a graveyard for Europeans. In truth, very little sagacity has hitherto been displayed in the selection of proper sites for military cantonments, and vast sums have been expended on the construction of barracks, which, after a time, proved to be uninhabitable. Thus three millions sterling were thrown away at Berhampore, and many other stations might be mentioned where a reckless expenditure of money was only the prelude to a fearful loss of life. In some cases, indeed, places, previously supposed to be salubrious, exhibited no symptoms of unhealthiness until after the lapse of years. The constant pressure, says Dr. McClelland, of heavy buildings "on the loose materials of which deep alluvial deposits are made up, produce growing changes beneath the surface; as, for instance, the gradual alteration of a bed of porous materials from a pervious to an impervious state. This would be very likely to be followed by corresponding changes in the soil, such as might seriously affect the salubrity of a place previously healthy, and be attended with increased sickness and mortality." Hence arises the necessity, hitherto unrecognised—at least in practice—of first ascertaining the nature of the soil and the geological formation of the neighbourhood. Calcareous deposits are found to be invariably unfavourable to health, as also tracts composed of laterite, which dry up slowly and are fruitful in fevers and dysentery. The influence of the geological structure on the salubrity of any particular district is most strikingly exemplified by the cretinism of the inhabitants of certain villages in Kumaon. This terrible malady, together with goitre, never occurs except where the water issues from limestone or passes over calcareous deposits. Some remarkable instances are given by Dr. McClelland where this is the sole difference between a healthy and an unhealthy village—in every other respect exactly analogous. Panda stands upon clayslate, “but scattered blocks of limestone partly cover the surface of the slate, and a small bed of the limestone terminates in a knoll on which the village is erected;” it contains 25 inhabitants, entirely free from goitre. About a mile distant is the hamlet of Salmora, inhabited by two families, Domes and Rajpoots, each consisting of seven persons. Of these, four Domes and two Rajpoots have goitre, though the village, like Panda, is elevated one hundred feet above the valley, and “only differs from it in being erected on limestone, from which rock it is supplied with water”—the people of Panda drawing theirs from clayslate. A yet more curious illustration is afforded by Panorah, a village containing seventy high-caste inhabitants and twenty Domes; of the former only one is affected with goitre, of the latter six. The explanation is as curious as the fact. “The Brahmin or high-caste inhabitants of this village derive their water from a spring in clayslate; and as the prejudice of the Hindoos denies to Domes the privilege of partaking of the water of the same spring, the excluded caste are forced in this, as in many other cases in Kumaon, to use this fluid from what they, as well as the Brahmins, believe to be impure sources”—it is taken from a stream issuing from limestone. The long, straggling village of Deota furnishes a yet more notable example both of the sanitary fact and of the tyranny of caste. One extremity is inhabited by twenty Brahmins, all free from goitre; the other, by forty Rajpoots, of whom two-thirds are afflicted, and forty Domes, every one of whom has goitre. “They are all alike well fed, and have little toil, their land producing the requisites of life almost without labour. Difference of caste does not here imply a difference in pecuniary circumstances, and, consequently, of the comforts of life. In these respects the three castes in this village are on a perfect equality!” What, then, is the cause of the total exemption of the Brahmins, and of the partial suffering of the Rajpoots? About one hundred yards from the village a spring of water gushes forth impetuously from a conglomerated rock, composed of calc tuff, inclosing masses and fragments of other rocks. The water of this spring being decidedly unhealthy, an aqueduct was constructed in former times, and terminated at the Brahmin extremity of the village. As this has since fallen into disrepair, only enough water is now conveyed for the use of the Brahmins, except during the rainy season, when the Rajpoots also make use of it—the Domes, however, being compelled all the year round to content themselves with the noxious fluid from the spring. Again, of the 50 inhabitants of Dacygong, who derive their water from clayslate, not one has a tumour to show; but only half a mile distant is the village of Ager, with exactly the same number of inhabitants, of whom 40 have large goitres and 20 are cretins—the water they use issuing from the drift of an old copper mine, situated in the limestone. But it is needless to multiply examples to prove the importance of exercising careful forethought in the selection of sites for either European or native stations. The necessity must be patent to all who are not enwrapped in prejudice or wedded to routine. Strategic reasons are, of course, entitled to grave consideration, but the health of the troops must be the object of the greatest solicitude to every commander of an army. Neither valour nor discipline will much avail without a sound mind in a sound body.

SEA TRANSPORT-SERVICE.*

SUCH extraordinary charges of ignorance and mismanagement are now daily alleged against the entire military system of this country, that, if only one-half be true, the success of the British arms in all quarters of the globe appears little short of miraculous. We appear, however, to have succeeded, in spite of our blunders, where other nations have failed whose more perfect system of organisation is now constantly held up for our admiration and guidance. If, then, we have done so much, notwithstanding our carelessness and want of forethought, what might we not have done had we condescended to benefit by experience, instead of blindly following precedents no longer applicable? It is now generally admitted that, until very recently, there was no branch of military service more wretchedly conducted than the transport of troops by sea. What must have been the sufferings of our unfortunate soldiers during the last great war, even on short voyages, is more than we can at present realise, beyond a general notion that they were inconceivably horrible. Even now there is room for great improvement, but which may be introduced with little difficulty or expense. Some valuable suggestions to this effect have lately been put forth in the form of a pamphlet by Mr. Kirwan, chiefly derived from the experience acquired by himself in the course of no fewer than nine voyages performed in attendance on troops. Probably, the most effectual step towards a radical improvement would be, as Mr. Kirwan suggests, by the formation of a Transport-Service Department, superintended by a Director-General, assisted by a Board constituted as follows:—

“A naval surveyor of high professional standing—an officer from the department of the Quartermaster-General, specially educated for the duties which he would be required in his new capacity to perform—and a medical officer who had directed his attention more particularly to the subject of transport ships and analytical chemistry.”

There can be no doubt that if really practical men were selected, a department thus organised might introduce an entire revolution, and render the transport of troops a safe and comfortable service instead of being, as at present, a combination of all kinds of annoyances and inconveniences. Mr. Kirwan further insists upon the advantages likely to arise from instituting a Governmental Transport Service. He would introduce a certain number of troopships ranging from 2,500 to 3,000 tons register, built expressly for the accommodation of troops, and capable of conveying to India or Australia a regiment one thousand strong, with its proportion of women and children, stores and provisions. A screw-propeller, worked by a steam power, from 250 to 300 horse, would suffice to make easy way during a calm, or against light head-winds. Into the interior economy of such a ship Mr. Kirwan enters at some length, but by no means confines himself to a consideration of the question so far as this proposed new service is concerned. His suggestions are so practical, and of such general applicability, that they may be adopted in any ship whatsoever, and even in a modified form will be found decidedly advantageous. It would be out of place in these columns to give anything like an analysis of the various errors and deficiencies he points out, or even of the improvements he recommends, and nothing appears to have been too minute for his microscopic eye. But we have no hesitation in drawing the attention of our medical and military readers to Mr. Kirwan's sensible and serviceable remarks on every detail connected with the transport of troops and their health, discipline, and comfort while on board ship.

MISCELLANEOUS.

GENERAL REED.—The following paper has been received by the Secretary of State for India in Council:—Extract of a letter from the Secretary of the Government of India to the adjutant-general of the army, dated Allahabad, 17th November, 1858. “I am directed to acquaint you, for the information of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, that the Governor-general is of opinion that the military arrangements made by Major-general Reed, in the Punjab, in concert with the civil authorities, during the early period of the mutinies in the North-Western Provinces in 1857, well merited the approbation which the officers received at the time from the late Commander-in-Chief; and that his lordship is fully satisfied that, from the 5th July, when the decease of Major-general Sir H. Barnard took place, to the 17th of that month, when ill-health obliged Major-general Reed to quit the camp before Delhi, that officer, in assuming command of the besieging force, and in directing its operations, performed a service which deserves the acknowledgments of Government.”

PERSIA.—Letters from Erzeroum state that the cold weather has already set in, and that snow has begun to fall. The same advices report that his Majesty the Shah of Persia had left Tabreez to return to the capital. The Persian Government had despatched a high dignitary of state to proceed to the frontiers of Azerbigian to meet his Excellency Sir Henry Rawlinson, her Britannic Majesty's Minister to the Persian Court, and conduct his Excellency to Teheran.

THE HON. HENRY STANLEY.—It will be remembered that some weeks ago several paragraphs appeared in the London and provincial newspapers, stating that the Hon. Henry Stanley, son of Lord Stanley of Alderley, had, during his travels, deserted the religious faith of his ancestors, embraced the doctrines of Mahomedanism, and, in fact, identified himself with the manners and superstitions of the East. However absurd and incredible the statements might easily have been supposed to be, yet there was an air of particularity and circumstantiality about them that made them pass current as truth. But, though no authoritative contradiction has previously been given to them, we are enabled positively to state that the calumnious rumours are utterly void of foundation. Mr. Stanley, like many other intelligent English gentlemen, has mixed with the inhabitants of the countries through which he passed, with a desire to become thoroughly acquainted with their manners, language, habits, and religion; and in his intercourse with the natives may have assimilated his costume somewhat with their habits. But that he had become in any way imbued with their religious ideas is wholly a calumny, at which Mr. Stanley must necessarily feel hurt and indignant. We understand that that gentleman, who is or was recently at Siam, is about to return home shortly, and with unabated regard for the creed and institutions of his native land.—Macclesfield Courier.

* Notes on the Dispatch of Troops by Sea. By C. J. Kirwan, Esq., Assist. Surg. H.M.'s 13th L.I. W. Thacker and Co.

INDIAN STATISTICS.—The total number of Royal and Company's troops employed in British India in 1856-57 was 281,569, viz.:—27,283 Royal, and 254,286 Company's troops. 108,105 troops were employed in Bengal, 64,169 in Madras, and 49,295 in Bombay. The revenue of India (in India) in 1856-57 was 31,691,015, and the expenditure £28,078,202, leaving a surplus of £3,611,813. The home charge, however, swept off £3,529,673, thus reducing the net surplus to £82,140. Land yielded a revenue of £17,722,170; excise, £45,685; sayer and akbarry, £1,441,179; and moturpha, £108,418; the Mint yielded £262,409; Post-office, £183,325; stamps, £622,165; customs, £2,092,544; salt, £2,685,574; and opium, £5,002,400. These were the gross receipts, afterwards reduced, more or less, by charges of collection, &c. The expenditure in India included £2,546,023, (net) for judicial and police charges, £10,795,788 for military charges, £491,186 for marine and pilotage, and £2,240,590 for the interest of debt. The public debt of British India, including the bond debt in England, is £59,401,969, paying an interest of £2,396,084. The bond debt in England figures for £3,915,317. In 1856-57 41,235 vessels of 4,549,278 tons entered and cleared at ports in India. 6,949 vessels were European and 34,286 native. The imports into British India in 1856-57 are valued at £28,608,284, and the exports at £26,591,877. Of the imports Bengal took £14,172,485; Madras, £2,540,739; and Bombay, £11,895,060. In the list of importing (into India) countries, the United Kingdom figures for £16,739,897 (or more than one-half of the whole imports); France, for £1,059,507; Suez, for £4,260,725, and China for £2,078,104. All other countries are under £1,000,000. Penang, Singapore, and Malacca are rated at £889,360, and Australia at about £537,000. America makes a very poor figure, only £153,377. From England were imported £1,154,540 worth of cotton twist and yarn, £1,835,957 of cotton piece goods, £607,464 of military stores, and £825,634 of manufactured metals. All the cotton goods are, as may be anticipated by the reader, supplied by England. It must be explained that of the total imports of £28,608,284, about one-half consists of merchandise, and the other of "treasure," in the shape of the precious metals, gold and silver. The exports (£26,591,877) include only £1,953,426 worth of treasure. Bengal exports, £18,443,967; Madras, £2,407,906; and Bombay, £10,740,604. Great Britain is a customer for £10,635,607; the Americas, for £1,380,103; the Arabian and Persian Gulfs, for £1,139,523; Ceylon, for £1,009,320; China, for £8,016,684; and France for £1,441,736. The exports include £4,437,949 of raw cotton (£3,412,200 to England), £2,025,058 of dyes, £2,587,456 of grain (only £811,270 to England), £7,056,630 of opium, £1,118,654 of seeds, about £1,000,000 of raw and manufactured silk, and £1,780,077 of sugar and candy. The exports of opium are steadily increasing, but in the return of opium sent to Great Britain a blank is left in each year. This requires explanation; it is probable that the drug reaches England indirectly. We can only state, on reference to the returns of the exports in detail, that £6,505,587 worth of opium (out of the grand total of £7,056,630) is exported to China, the great consumer of this invaluable narcotic, £18,785 to New South Wales, £531,210 to Penang, Singapore, and Malacca, and £1,030 to "other countries." The actual quantities of the principal articles exported from India are as follows, viz.:—319,653,524 lb. of raw cotton, 2,181,000 qrs. of wheat, 9,383,925 gunnies and bags, 10,897,930 lb. of indigo (value £1,937,907), 637,416 cwt. of jute, 72,385 chests of opium (value £7,056,630), 28,305,712 qrs. of rice (value £2,301,182), 693,827 cwt. of saltpetre, or nitrate of soda, 2,142,403 cwt. of seeds, 16,002 pieces of Cashmere shawls (value £200,640), 1,756,778 lb. of raw silk, 1,568,571 cwt. of sugar, and 17,253 cwt. of tallow; about 820,000 lb. of tea and 18,484,606 lb. of wool. These statistics refer to the year 1856-57.

THE MELTON RIDING BELT.—Import-

tant to those who are suffering from Weakness in the Back and General Debility. The following is printed by permission:

"Sir,—You ask for my opinion of your Melton Riding Belt;

I give it. Having resided for a long time in India, my constitution is very much debilitated, and for a long time I was suffering from a weakness in the back and the lower part of the body, which no internal remedy could reach, and the slightest exertion completely overpowered me. I was ordered by my medical man to wear a support, and seeing your advertisement I obtained one of your Melton Riding Belts, which I have worn for the last five months. It gives me great support. I can take riding or other exercise without feeling that extreme lassitude and weariness afterwards. My general health is much improved. You have my best thanks. You will secure my best support.—Yours truly,

NEWBURY'S COD LIVER OIL CAKES.

"We have examined a specimen of gingerbread made by Messrs. Newbery—each cake containing a teaspoonful of Cod Liver Oil. The gingerbread is extremely light and pleasant, the flavour of the oil being completely covered. This seems likely to prove a very useful mode of administering

Cod Liver Oil to children, and to others who are nauseated by

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.

—ASTHMA, COUGHS, COLDS.—These complaints of the chest come on with alarming frequency while the weather is unsettled. At first the symptoms are readily remediable by the joint influence of Holloway's remarkable medicaments. While taking the Pills freely as the constitution will comfortably permit, the Ointment should assiduously be rubbed, at least twice a day, on the chest and between the shoulders, till a thick rash comes out, when the violence of all symptoms will gradually give way, the breathing becomes longer, and the oppression less.

No medicines are more efficient in chest complaints; none can be used with equal safety and certainty. Both Pills and Ointment are accompanied by very clear and simple directions for

THE MAGNESIAN EFFERVESCENT is especially valuable to those going to India or travelling in warm climates; as a mild and efficacious saline aperient it stands unequalled, and will be found peculiarly adapted for delicate females and children. To be obtained through all respectable chemists, and wholesale from Messrs. BAYCLAY, Farringdon-street (put up in stoppered bottles at 4s. 6d. for India), and smaller size at 1s. 10d. and 2s. 9d.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Calcutta Mail of the 22nd October has arrived, and the Bombay Mail of the 12th November has been telegraphed from Aden, and will probably be delivered in London on Monday next.

The latest intelligence is to the effect that Dwarka has been evacuated after several days' bombardment. This feat of arms may be expected to bring the Waghers to a more peaceable frame of mind.

The Governor-general and the Commander-in-chief were at Cawnpore on the 15th of October, and proposed to start together for Lucknow on the 20th. The Viceroy's camp was to be pitched in the Martiniere grounds, and Lord Clyde's near the Dilkoosha Palace. After holding reviews and durbars on a grand scale, their Excellencies were to proceed to Agra in the early part of the present month. Lord Canning, it is said, has received instructions from the Home Government requiring his presence in Calcutta on the arrival of Mr. Wilson; in which case the viceregal progress will be brought to a speedier conclusion than may be altogether agreeable to that potentate. His lordship's escort amounts to an army, and consists of the following corps and detachments:—E. troop, royal horse artillery, 176 men, 6 guns, and horses; Bengal artillery, 140 men, 6 guns, and horses; 2nd dragoon guards, 108 men and horses; 1st European cavalry, 160 men and horses; 1st Punjab cavalry, 400 men and horses; Roberts's horse, 390 men and horses; her Majesty's 35th regiment, 830 men; her Majesty's 80th regiment, 750 men; 1st Sikh infantry, 700 men; Cawnpore levy, 700 men; depot battalion, 200 men; Governor-general's body-guard, 100 men and horses. Possibly, it is the intention of the Viceroy to proceed in person against the Nana, and drag the miscreant from his hiding-place with his own viceregal hands.

The Nana was not dead on the 11th of October, for on that day the different rebel leaders agreed to place their united "followings" under his sole command. Numerically, the force under his orders appears to be larger than was generally supposed. According to a Lucknow journal, it may be estimated in round numbers at 14,000 men; of whom 2,500 belong to the Begum and Mummoo Khan, and 5,000 to Subadar Debee Sing. The report of the Nana's death is evidently nothing more than a ruse on the part of the Knight of Katmandoo, to avoid fulfilling his engagement to expel him from the Nepalese territories.

The attempt to induce the discharged Europeans to re-enlist for China has signally failed, owing, in some measure, to the new period of service being fixed at ten years. Only forty-five men have accepted the bounty, and it was supposed that the offer would not be repeated to the troops still in the country. It was likewise rumoured that the Sikhs had exhibited some unwillingness to serve in China.

With regard to home news there is nothing to record, unless it be that the Secretary of State for India has intimated to the Council that there will be no patronage at their disposal for some time to come.

From Shanghai we learn that Admiral Hope had recovered from the serious wounds he received in the affair at the Peiho. The English ambassador was also at Shanghai.

As the Government of Japan had at length complied with the demands of General Mouravieff, the storm that threatened in that quarter has passed over for the present. The Russians, however, are reported to have obtained the cession of the southern portion of the Island of Saghalien. The thin end of the wedge has, in that case, been inserted, and the disrapture of the Japanese Empire is already "looming in the distance," notwithstanding "that the age of conquests is passed."

CALCUTTA CORRESPONDENCE.

CALCUTTA, October 22, 1859.

The English papers, with their comments on the China disaster, have reached us. The indignation displayed at such a flagrant breach of faith on the part of the Chinese Government is very natural, and was expected here, but the means by which it is to be avenged have amused us greatly. We are wearied of dinning into your ears the incapacity of the Governor-general, and equally wearied of neither being listened to, nor believed by those who do listen. Both Conservatives and Liberals are determined to keep Lord Canning in his place, and even approve of the very worst of his acts. We have scarcely yet recovered from the surprise with which we read Sir Charles Wood's entire approval of the course which Lord Canning pursued regarding the old Company's gallant European army. In India we look upon it as the very worst of his many impolitic acts, dictated as much by malice and bad feeling towards Europeans in general as by motives of policy or army discipline, or adhesion to the law or opinion of the law officers of the Crown. A sudden change took place in the circumstances of the time, and a new opportunity was offered to him by the disaster in China of endeavouring to detain the discharged Europeans. A soothing and well-worded general order, offering the men a bounty to re-enlist for China, might have been successful; but Lord Canning left Calcutta without deigning to make the attempt. A telegraphic order from the British Ministry reached him at Sheergotty, three hundred miles from Calcutta, and Lord Canning then issued the following order:—

SHEERGOTTY, Oct. 12, 1859.

The Governor-general has received authority from her Majesty's Government to grant the boon of two years' service to those men of the local army who have not taken their discharge under the general order No. 883, of the 20th of June last.

His Excellency has also received authority to permit such men as have taken their discharge, and are not compromised by part taken in any act of insubordination connected with the question of discharge, to enlist for service in China in any of her Majesty's regiments of the line, or her Majesty's artillery or marines, which may be now in China or may be proceeding there. Soldiers so enlisting will receive a bounty of (50) fifty rupees, upon the condition that they enlist for ten years' service.

The foregoing announcement is made for general information. Further details on the subject will be published without delay; and until such details are published, volunteering will not commence.—R. J. H. BROWN, Major gen., Sec. to the Govt. of India, with the Gov. gen.

In this order the Governor-general took special care so to word it that the re-enlistment of the men was made to appear as a matter of favour, and those who had shown any insubordination were to be excluded. Why, to a man they were insubordinate. They were not only insubordinate, but they mutinied. If there had been any chance of getting the men to re-enlist the wording of the order would have destroyed it. Among a thousand men to whom the offer was made some forty only accepted it.

I said we were amused with the means by which, according to your calculations at home, the China disaster is to be avenged. According to the Times, India is to send the men, China is to pay the money, and England is not to have much trouble in the matter. With a Governor-general of common capacity and activity, India, undoubtedly, could send a great expedition to China, as she has done before; but Lord Canning gives himself no more thought about China than he does about Timbuctoo or Honolulu. He sent one regiment and ordered another to go to the assistance of Mr. Bruce, and this is all he thought he could spare, considering he requires an army of four thousand men to escort himself in his triumphant progress through the country. If this is the sort of Governor-general you are determined to retain in India, why you must take the consequences.

Lord Canning's financial measures are on a par with all his other measures—incomprehensible in their folly. The Tanjore bonds which Government desires to extinguish are at two and a-half per cent. discount. In order to effect their extinction, Government offers holders one-half in cash and one half in five per cent. paper, which at present is at twelve per cent. discount! The tax on trades and professions is miserably insufficient for the wants of Government, affects only one class of the community, and is most inquisitorial in its action, and injurious to the tradesmen, from the publicity it will give to the profits of their trade. All this, however, makes it a favourite with the Government, and it will be passed, unless stopped from home. Petitions to Parliament against it from every Presidency have gone home, and the natives, who are only now beginning to comprehend its nature, are much alarmed at the chance of its becoming law. If it does, every native banker and tradesman's shop in the country will be shut up, and a passive resistance will be offered to it which will compel the Government to abrogate it. The property which could be easily taxed, which would bear it most easily, and which could not by any process evade taxation, is land and Government stocks; but our rulers are afraid to touch them, and, moreover, they have said so. And thus they resort to petty shifts and vexations, and unequal taxes, which will end in defeat and disgrace. The following paragraph is a neat little summary of the measures of the Government. It is written with reference to Mr. Wilson's speech at Sheffield.

Mr. Wilson acknowledges that the present state of the Indian finances is not satisfactory, but he hopes in the general prosperity of the people, and the extension of their commerce, to find that improved state of finance which is needed in India. The present Government will tell him how to accomplish this. First double all the principal duties on exports and imports, next impose restrictions upon the free exercise of industry, and employment of capital, and lastly refuse to take any tax from the wealthy and idle classes as inconsistent with justice. When Mr. Wilson arrives, he will find this method of developing the resources of the country in operation, and it is for him to calculate how many years it will require to effect that improvement on which he now relies.

A few of the smaller rebel chiefs have been caught and hung; but the Nana still roams at large in the Nepal valleys. Rumours of his death have been promulgated, but there is no truth in them. They have been spread by the Nana himself, to assist in favouring his escape, as he is now being sought after in good earnest by the Ghoorkas, under the orders of Jung Bahadoor. What between the Ghoorkas and our vigilant outposts he has not much chance of escaping capture long, except by taking that poison which he is said to carry on his person.

MAHE DE LA BOURDONNAIS.

An English Governor in an English Colony has done an act of historic justice to the one Frenchman who has ever comprehended true colonial policy. On the 30th August last, Mr. Stevenson, Governor of the Mauritius, presided at the inauguration of the Statue of Labourdonnais, the founder of the colony. It was a great day for the colonists, and we cannot presume to attempt a description of a scene on which the editor of the local journal, and "his Worship, the Mayor of Port Louis," descended in language which would have been eloquent if it were not more French than English. "Heaven itself seemed to smile on this great act of historic justice. The summits of the majestic mountains, looming in the distance, were enwreathed with the white clouds of our intertropical winter, whilst a sharp, steady breeze maintained the multitude of flags of all nations which adorned the scene, in graceful and welcoming motion." The Place d'Armes, in the centre of which the statue is placed, was decked with flags, which were themselves "decorated with every possible variety of the Flora Mauritiana." Three thousand spectators filled the seats around. The Mayor, with true French empressment, exhausted himself in finding seats for the ladies, and in his speech appealed to their sympathies, hoping, with a comic pathos, that, "as first magistrate of this important town," he had struck the right chord in their breasts, and that they would not reproach him with not having done more than was physically possible under the circumstances. With the sound of cannon his Excellency the Governor took his place, followed by a long procession of fair young creoles, with banners and flowers, from the schools of Port Louis. The judges of the Supreme Court, the heads of departments in full costume, officers, naval and military, bishops and clergy, Protestant and Catholic, delegates from Réunion, and the resident consular representatives of foreign nations, all figure in a picture which rejoiced the French editor's heart. When the sensation excited by the arrival of Mrs. Stevenson had subsided, amid the strains of the National Anthem, the sound of a royal salute, and the deafening applause of the delighted spectators, "the screen which had until then mantled the statue fell from its ligatures," and Labourdonnais was seen. In the court dress of the time of Louis XV. he is represented as reposing against the lower trunk of the Dattier tree, bearing on his breast his insignia and orders. Speeches followed. The Governor in his oration was evidently so polite as to accommodate himself to the French idea of festive rhetoric. The Hon. M. Fropier spoke in French, but, alas! the reporter has to express his regrets that he cannot at once publish the address "for two reasons; 1, on account of its length; and 2, in consequence of our having been continually interrupted by the proximity to the reporter's table of a certain well-known and most eccentric gentleman, who would insist upon our handing up to the chair a sheet of paper, purporting to be a speech prepared by him for the occasion." Even the enthusiasm of the "eccentric person," however, fell far short of the Mayor's, who, in his peroration, expressed his pride that "as an humble member of Colonial society" he had fulfilled his duty, and called upon the orchestra for the "magnificent cantata composed for the occasion, which was chaunted by the elite of the dramatic troupe, was listened to throughout with breathless interest, and was saluted at its close with immense and long continued plaudits." A procession of young ladies, dressed in white, with wreathed coiffures, strewing flowers of choice beauty round the base of the statue, and "Partant pour la Syrie" closed the auspicious day. The Mayor, it is to be hoped, slept soundly.

Though the whole reads like a chapter of "Pickwick," we must not omit to assign to the act described its true historical value. The fashion in which the creoles and half-Anglicised Frenchmen of the island of Paul and Virginia rejoice in the man whom it delights them to honour may be absurd, but he was—to the French—as worthy of honour as Clive or Warren Hastings among ourselves. In the whole history of French adventure in the East, Labourdonnais was the one man who had not only a definite Colonial policy but the ability to carry it out. His career fills the first half of the last century; little more than a century ago he died, under the ingratitude and injustice of his country. Born at St. Mayo in 1699, he spent his early youth at sea, and in 1719 sailed for Surat as lieutenant in the service of the French East India Company. After taking Mahé, in 1724, he conducted several trading expeditions, the success of which recommended him to the Portuguese. After destroying the Mahratta pirates on the Malabar coast and securing a favourable treaty from the Zamorin of Calicut, he returned to France in 1733. The well-known Orry was minister of finance under Cardinal Fleury, and by them he was appointed Governor-general of the Islands of France and Bourbon. Abandoned by both the Portuguese and the Dutch, the French Company had taken possession of them, and Labourdonnais found on his arrival only a few Europeans who had escaped from the massacre of their countrymen in Madagascar, some of the Company's sailors and soldiers with whom mutiny was chronic, and residents from various European countries, who considered themselves irresponsible lords. He could not weld this heterogeneous mass into a well-ordered community without exciting much enmity against himself, the fruits of which brought him ultimately to the Bastille and the grave. He reformed the so-called Courts; he created a black police, who drove out or exterminated the brigands that infested the island; he laid the foundation of that commercial policy which has made the Mauritius so prosperous; he introduced the cultivation of cotton, indigo, manioc, sugar, and coffee; he filled the colonists with a mercantile spirit; though without artisans or architects, he made a canal, built magazines, arsenals, barracks, hospitals, roads, and bridges; and created the ports of St. Louis and Mahébourg, so called after himself. There are, in fact, no improvements in the colony the germs of which may not be traced to his administration.

But his enemies were active in France, and thither he returned, in 1740, to meet their calumnies. This he accomplished so successfully that he was sent out to India as chief of a fleet, ready for war with England, which was then impending, and broke out in 1744. His presence was hateful to Dupleix; he stood in the way of his ambitious designs. But his was the honour of bombarding Madras two years after, of forcing it to open its gates to him, and of using his victory with wise moderation. Had not Dupleix interfered, he would have secured for France a large ransom; but Madras was restored, without payment, by treaty. Wearied in the contest with Dupleix, Labourdonnais returned to France, to be accused, kept in the Bastille for three years, and liberated with an emphatic declaration of his innocence, only to sink into his grave in 1753. The poor recompense his widow received from Louis XV. was a pension of 100 livres. The Colonial Assembly of the Mauritius gave his daughter, Madame la Marquise de Moutluzon, a pension of 3,000. Dupleix saw the end of all his ambitious hopes, and died an insolvent, hardly saved from prison. There is much in the life of Labourdonnais like that of Lally, who perished by the guillotine, a victim to the envy of Dupleix's successor, M. Bussy.

Thus France rewarded her great colonisers, and now an English colony renders tardy justice to the greatest among them. Unlike the English East India Company, which, left to itself, founded our Eastern Empire and has ever defended and rewarded its own servants, that of France failed from the first, and while it rewarded its worst servants, persecuted its best. Established in 1661, its first mistake was in forming a settlement in Madagascar. Throughout its history, Colbert, Fleury and Orry used it as a political engine to carry out the objects of the ministry of the day, and not of its shareholders. The Company retaliated on those of its servants who, like Labourdonnais and Lally, promoted the objects of the State while they advanced the interests of the Company. And now the former is honoured on foreign soil, and the latter remembered as the most meritorious and most unhappy of the many soldiers of fortune who have increased the honour of France.—Friend of India.

"IL FAUT VIVRE."

There is a change passing over the Anglo-Indian community which in another ten years will create a greater revolution in the externals of society than any political event—we mean the rise in the cost of living. Up to 1848 India was considered for Europeans not only an untaxed but a very cheap country. There was some little self-deception in the idea, caused partly by the low rate of individual wages, and partly by the general well-being of the community, but it was in essentials correct. True, households were very large. True, also, all European luxuries were very dear, but some very heavy items of expense were absent. Rent in the interior was low, and in Calcutta, taking room for room, not higher than in England. The cost of keeping a carriage was not a fifth the amount expended for the luxury at home. Servants, though numerous, cost scarcely the half of their present rate.

Oil was Rs. 8 a maund. All out-door labourers, gardeners, carpenters, coolies, boatmen, received rates which now seem preposterous, 10 pice a day being a fair average. We have ourselves, not very old residents, paid hundreds of coolies 10 pice a day. Above all, the bazaar bill was low. We have seen an account for a very well kept table, at which four persons dined, off silver, every day, and which never exceeded Rs. 56 a month. A family who spent Rs. 200 in the house lived well, and Rs. 400 would, out at Calcutta, maintain something approaching to state.

The gradual increase in the wealth of Bengal, and some local causes, have changed all that since first labour began to rise. The increase, long resisted by employers, became, five years since, a necessity. The price of unskilled labour doubled. Skilled labour, already receiving wages above subsistence limit, rose more slowly; but rise it did, till a mason, who in 1849 was content with 3 annas a day, now haggles for 8 annas, and will not work under 7 annas. Rents rose enormously. All the eighty rupees houses—the class always most needed—increased to Rs. 120. In Calcutta the rise was even faster, so fast as to produce a wretched system of boarding and "chumeries." The price of rice, the standard for all food, except perhaps flesh, doubled. All servants demanded an increase, and as masters are more unjust towards private servants than towards artisans, avenged themselves by increased pillage. The price of oil doubled. The bazaar bill rose in perhaps a larger, certainly in an equal, proportion. Almost the only item which maintained in any degree its old level was the staple expenditure, and that increased from thirty-five to forty per cent. The process still went on till 1850 brought a new addition to the housekeeping troubles. All articles of clothing, all wine and beer, all European luxuries, books, carriages, horses, stationery, plate, jewellery, tobacco, glassware, and generally every article which distinguishes a civilised man from a Nicobar Islander, was taxed an extra ten, and cost an extra twenty, per cent. Nothing on the other hand became cheaper, except medicines and postage, two items of importance only in very large families.

All this while incomes have shown a steady tendency to diminish. In the services they have been directly reduced, while every kind of incidental gain has been gradually stripped away. Out of the services there are perhaps more "openings," more chances for a man who can work like a horse, live like an anchorite and wait, than formerly existed. Some trades and professions, doctors, tailors, editors, shoemakers, pleaders, hotel-keepers, and teachers, have become more prosperous. But the general average of receipts is lower, and the prizes are very few. How many merchants go home with fortunes, we mean real fortunes, tangible cash credits above £20,000, and not a mere rumour of a fortune. How many dare draw Rs. 2,000 a month for private expenditure even while in business? Then there is the element of time, though it is one always forgotten. An income of Rs. 400 a month to be followed after five years by Rs. 800, is a very different thing from Rs. 400 a month unchanged for ten years. Yet the length both of servitude and independent effort has undoubtedly increased. Who now goes home at thirty-five with means? Adventurers are well off if they escape at forty, and then with an income secured on a business instead as of old with solid cash. Add to all this the present evil of heavy municipal taxation, and the coming evil of heavier direct taxation on incomes, and we may fairly describe modern Anglo-Indians as fallen upon evil days.

The pressure is not yet unbearable, though it falls already with extreme severity on classes. Missionaries, subalterns, all the large section of men receiving from Rs. 200 to Rs. 500 a month, find it a most difficult matter to live, begin to do without separate houses, and, worst sign of all, to declare it impossible for them to marry. The mass, however, are still a well-to-do community, and the screw must have one turn more before a radical change in the habits of society becomes indispensable. What line will the change take?

There may be changes in store it is impossible to foresee, but we suspect two will very soon be imperative. One is the dismissal of the large, ill-ordered, inefficient households Anglo-Indians feel themselves obliged to keep. The sweeper excepted, a functionary who will always be essential, except in the great cities, there is no work in an Indian house, say of the grade of Rs. 1,500 a-month, which could not be done by three or four good resident servants. There need be no rise of wages, for such servants as we speak of would live on their master's food, now thrown away. If no natives can be found to do it, and there are plenty, Madrassees, hillmen, and, perhaps, Chinamen, and free negroes will be imported. The scheme of domestic service will become English, to the infinite relief of all except the few who have become Indianised till they have forgotten what comfort means. The second change must be an alteration in the mode of obtaining supplies, which will follow the introduction of a new race of servants, and for the rest we must wait for a growing civilisation. In a little town like Serampore, for example, a complete though very clumsy system of cabs enables the residents to dispense with carriages except for show. Durwans disappear with resident servants, gardens in Calcutta are already given up. Gas, or a better substitute, will extinguish oil. A habit of direct communication with England will diminish all shop charges, and the resolute economy which pressure alone secures will suppress that lazy, lax system of wastefulness which destroys incomes more than even ostentation, and which is still the besetting habit of Anglo-Indians.

That picture of the future is not a pleasant one, and many a man will feel inclined to say that if he is to struggle for a subsistence he prefers to struggle in a climate where he has health and friends to enable him to bear. It is, however, we fear too true a drawing, and it is those who are wise in time who will feel least the effect of the coming storm.—Friend of India.

A NATIVE PARLIAMENT.

We were the other day conversing with a Bengalee Baboo of some pretensions, who spoke English and talked politics, and altogether answered to the modern idea of an intelligent native gentleman. Of course we talked of the mutiny. Said our intelligent friend, who is an esprit fort in politics:—"If the mutiny had come off some ten or twelve years later, it would not have much mattered to us." It would have found us still more unprepared, observed we. "Very probably," quoth the Bengalee coolly, "but by that time we should have been able to take up the government ourselves in Bengal." He then went on to enlarge on the progress made by young Bengal in literature, arts, and sciences, and explained that at this rate, they, the Bengalees, should be enabled to realise political equality and liberty within a very short space of time.

Now this gentleman's views are probably by no means extreme in comparison with the average of educated Bengalees. He no doubt, when at home, takes in the Indian Patriot and Hindoo Field, besides a few racy native periodicals, and is a member of the British Indian Association in Calcutta, corresponding and co-operating probably with the Ungomuni Islamee of Mussulman Association for promoting the prosperity of all natives generally, and Mahomedans particularly, for which vide prospectus. He belongs to a class which is peculiarly fostered and encouraged by a certain section of the British community, and which is fast learning the important arts of political combination and agitation. What is more, the supreme Government in Bengal looks upon their rapid progress with a complacent eye, and shows every disposition to put this party in opposition to its somewhat unmanageable European population. The Indian Field, no contemptible paper as regards style and power of composition, bounds on the Baboo to attack the Britisher, and acts as bottle-holder to its native friends the Hindoo Patriot, invariably repeating and applauding any peculiarly vicious article which may issue from the latter. We have no doubt but that Lord Canning and all the Calcutta members of Government take in the Hindoo Patriot, and are pleased with themselves for thus showing a liberal and tolerant spirit worthy of this enlightened age. Thus patted on the back, encouraged, and pushed forward, the native Liberal party is advancing at gigantic strides, and we feel sure that our intelligent friend, whose remarks concerning the mutiny were quoted at the commencement of this article, is a very mild exponent of the ideas and anticipations of his countrymen.

Now, we are aware that we, up here in the North West, are somewhat behind the age and comparatively benighted, that our style of Government is patriarchal, and that our notions regarding the native population are simply barbarous; therefore we do not shrink from owning that our respectable Bengalee's cool remark to the effect that they, the Bengalees, could have got on without us if the mutiny had been postponed for some dozen years, gave us an unpleasant start, and when our friend had gone, led us into a very queer train of meditation. We will not dwell upon the characteristically pitiless ingratitude displayed in the observation, suggesting a bird's-eye view of the educated Baboo calmly tumbling his educators and teachers into a pit, after having allowed the sepoy to cut all their throats, and proceeding unconcernedly to "get on without them." We wish to consider whether all this is tending in Calcutta, and whether those who encourage the Calcutta natives to demand their political rights are exactly aware of what they are doing; also whether the Indian Field, whose independence and disinterestedness, supposing its articles to be written by Europeans, deserve at least some commendation, is acting wisely in fostering and stimulating a fierce spirit of political antagonism between the white and black races in Bengal. Sir C. Jackson was right after all—there can never be equality of races. And what is more, there never has been, in any age or in any country, an equality of two perfectly distinct races forming one nation. Wherever two distinct races have met in any part of the world there has been a struggle, and one has gone under. The two races may have subsequently coalesced and united by intermixture, so as to have become in course of time one race to all intents and purposes, but two separate races have never existed, and never will exist in accord. Take the example of Ireland. It cost us a bloody struggle, which lasted four hundred years, to fairly conquer Ireland, because up to this day the Saxon and the Celt are distinct, and the Celt hates the Saxon, who has, nevertheless, attempted to conciliate him with every sort of political concessions. Yet, after all, there is but a very slight difference of race between Celt and Saxon—nothing, less than nothing, as compared with the difference between Saxon and Hindoo; and yet these Calcutta politicians proclaim that a legal and political equality of races is the most reasonable thing in the world to ask and the easiest to grant. "Abolish all political privileges, remove all such antiquated barriers from between the Englishman and the native, and there you have a free and independent people, differing only in colour and customs." "A native has as much right to the high offices of state as an European, rather more so, as he is in his own country." "He has a right to be represented in council." "Why do you blow hot and cold with the same breath? say the ardent advocates of political progress among the natives; "why do you refuse to apply to the Hindoos those principles of liberty and equality which you so universally upheld among yourselves?" And this specious cry carries away the superficial and unreflecting among the Europeans, who like to enjoy the complacent feeling that they are superior to the prejudices of race, and are disinterestedly advancing the cause of civilisation and humanity among the awakened heathen.

It is really dreadful to think that our lives and fortunes are at the mercy of such superficial, yet horribly dangerous politicians, who seem by the late measures to muster strong around the Vice roy, and to have made some impression even on Lord Stanley. Good Heavens! is it not clear that where we are as one to ten thousand, political equality must bring on political superiority on the part of the natives? Where are we to stop, and who is to put on the drag when the natives have once got hold of the reins? We suppose that a majority in the Representative Assembly will hold the executive powers, and that its mandates will control the army. How can it be otherwise? They who hold the purse will hold the sword, and a native representative is not likely to be moderate in his encroachments.

Fancy Bhowanee Pershad Dutt, the honourable member for Cossitollah, moving in the Parliament of Calcutta that the rule which retains all artillery in the army, and all treasuries in the Civil Service, within the hands of Europeans alone, is a disgraceful slur upon the character of the native gentlemen in each of the professions, and fancy it being carried by a large majority of Baboos that the said rules be immediately abolished. What would be the consequence of such a peculiar political crisis, which no one can declare to be improbable, if the preliminary steps be once granted? The honourable member for Cossitollah would be perfectly correct and consistent in his views. It is and would be a disgraceful piece of inconsistency to allow a Hindoo every sort of political equality, and to deny him a commission in the artillery.

On what principle could you possibly refuse? If he is to be trusted to make laws and manage the executive, he may surely be trusted with a nine-pounder. Also, "what do you mean by disarming our loyal fellow-subjects, and why have we, the Hindoos, not the best right to be allowed to protect our own country?" Why, indeed! Yet what would be the upshot of it all anyone can see. The Anglo-Saxon would begin to perceive that although theoretically equal with the patriotic Hindoo, he was practically becoming inferior. The Saxon has a great many faults, and one of them is a diabolical amount of stubborn pride, especially national pride. He has never yet "gone under" to any other nation or race upon the broad earth, and, all things considered, he is not likely to begin by knocking under to the Bengalee. The upshot would be a short but savage struggle, another exhibition of that cool Teutonic ferocity which the mutiny showed to be latent in the blood of so many Englishmen, and which is to native fury as red-hot iron to blazing straw. The native house of representatives would vanish into thin air, and the educated Bengalee would learn too late under the grinding despotism of a justly-enraged dominant race, that every one must hold his own in this wicked world, that political privileges are a snare and a delusion, without physical power to uphold them, and that they cannot expect merely by mounting on our shoulders to reach, in fifty years, that glorious freedom and independence which has taken our forefathers and ourselves five hundred years in England to accomplish.—Mofussilite.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MAURITIUS.—The police authorities of Mauritius having made certain necessary rules regarding the Mohurram, or, as it is there called, Yamsé festival, the Mahomedans have forwarded a petition on the subject to Parliament. They say:—"Their altars have been, if not desecrated, yet compulsorily abandoned, without any regard whatever for the consequences thus inflicted upon a very imposing proportion of the entire population of the island; and they are now, for the first time, compelled to enregister the melancholy fact, that religious tolerance, in its broad and generally accepted sense, is no longer aught else than a dead letter in this colony." A French lawyer must have been engaged to draw up the petition. The matter seems to have been subsequently arranged satisfactorily. The Mauritius Reporter anticipated a revolt and massacres "the parallel of which has not been witnessed since Delhi was in the hands of our army in the East," and charged the superintendent of police with choosing this year for his new rules "with almost infernal malignity."

INDIA PHOTOGRAPHED.—The New Times says Lord Canning is to be accompanied in his N.W. tour by Monsieur Malette, a professional photographer.

CONSERVANCY OF FORESTS.—The Lahore Chronicle states that the Chiefs of Kothee and Keonthal, near Simla, have stipulated with Government to maintain an efficient establishment for the conservancy of the valuable forests in their territories. The Deodar abounds in that district, and owing to its weight cannot easily be transported to a distance. It is largely used in Simla and the military cantonments of Subathoo, Dugshai, and Kussowlee. The demand is increasing, and hitherto the forests have been exposed to wanton destruction by the villagers and their cattle. The Deodar, called by the natives Keeloo, grows best at an elevation of from 6,000 to 8,000 feet above the sea.

THE BOLAN PASS.—The Government of Bombay has published a report by Dr. Cook, in medical charge of the Khelat Agency, on the small range of hills in Beloochistan to the south of Dadur, and on the nature of the hills throughout the line of the Bolan Pass from its commencement, five miles from Dadur, where the width is about two hundred and fifty yards, to its termination at the Dasliti-be-Dowlut. The Pass is sixty miles in length, with the Bolan river running through it. It is constructed seven miles from the easterly mouth and beyond Siri-Bolan, its westerly termination, where a few men might hold it against vast odds. It passes through the great chain of the Hella Mountains, which consist of the following beds:—"Conglomerate sandstone clay,—of the low ranges near Dadur, and which probably form a bed of the plain of inconsiderable thickness and non-fossiliferous. Sandstone clay conglomerate, of several hundred feet in thickness; limestone; nummulitic limestone, and blue clay, containing seams of coal and shales, and interstratified by limestone (fossiliferous)." The Bengal column of the army of the Indus in 1839 spent six days in marching through the Bolan. It forms the great line of communication between Sind and Khorassan. The Gomal Pass, farther north, is that through which the Lohani Afghans lead their great annual caravans to the plains.

INDIAN TELEGRAPHS.—Since the reduction of charges for telegraphic messages the number sent from Calcutta has risen in each month from 1,158 to 1,933. The rule enforcing cash payments for official messages has reduced them from 274 to 179 a month. The number of errors made in despatch in Bengal, where the examiners' returns are the most trustworthy, was one in every 762 words. The tariff of prices is the cheapest in any country. A message of twenty-five words sent in England for a distance beyond 150 miles costs Rs. 2.

London to Marseilles ..	815	....	12	12
London to Vienna ..	1206	....	12	12
London to Trieste ..	1526	....	9	12
London to St. Petersburg ..	1877	....	16	12

Calcutta to Benares ..	400	....	1	9
Calcutta to Agra ..	800	....	3	2
Calcutta to Madras ..	925	....	4	11
Calcutta to Bombay (1600 miles by the line, but charged by the map as 1200 only), same as London to Vienna ..			4	11
Galle to Kurrachee ..	1650	....	7	13
Galle to Peshawur ..	2100	....	9	6

The department has reason to congratulate itself, but we would mention one fact. A message of sixteen words from Serampore to Calcutta sent on either side of the river, a distance of twelve miles, invariably takes at least three hours in transit. From the annual report of the electric telegraph department for 1858-59 we learn that the total number of miles now in use in India is 10,123. The despatch from Bombay to Calcutta of a bulletin of English news of 140 words in four hours and seven minutes in bad weather, and when a copy was taken at every intermediate station, is noticed as a rate of progress scarcely to be surpassed. The receipts in the month of April last were Rs. 32,956, exclusive of service messages. The greatest receipts are in Bombay, Rs. 86,162 in the year. Then comes Bengal—Rs. 81,385; and Madras—Rs. 46,465. The cash value of the work done was upwards of 6½ lakhs of rupees. The number of messages sent in all India was 1,57,834, of which 56,670 were service. Of the private messages, those sent by natives were 3,926 per cent. Public messages are long; those from private parties short. Half of the latter were under sixteen words; one-third of the former twenty-five to thirty-two words, one-third from thirty-three to forty-eight, and one-third forty-nine words and upwards.—Friend of India.

BENGAL ARMY.—Lord Clyde, following up Lord Canning's order on the Bengal army, has directed nominal and numerical rolls of the men composing the 1st, 7th, 8th, 11th, 12th, 15th, 17th, 20th, 30th, 37th, 39th, 40th, 42nd, 40th, 50th, and 52nd, and 67th regiments, who are to be retained in the service, to be transmitted to head-quarters "with a view to the necessary steps being taken for posting them to corps remaining on the strength of the Bengal army." The remnants of the 11th Irregular Cavalry may join any similar corps they desire. The seventy-four men of the late 34th are to be divided between the 32nd and 43rd. The present state of the 32nd, 43rd, 63rd, and Alipore regiments is to be reported. All young officers of the above regiments, who have already done duty with an European regiment for six months, are directed to join their corps. No hint is given as to the future state of the regiments.

GHURWAL.—The North-west papers notice the appointment by Lord Canning of the eldest illegitimate son of the late Rajah of Ghurwal, the small principality in the Himalayas, as his successor. The Rajah himself is said to have nominated his second son, and that son has been officiating as Rajah, has been addressed as such by native princes and English tourists, and is most popular with the people. Now that Lord Canning has at last come to a decision, the people are dissatisfied. As both sons were illegitimate, the late Rajah could adopt the second in preference to the first, neither having a claim, and this, it is said, he did.

CALCUTTA UNIVERSITY.—It is expected that at least 800 candidates will go up for the entrance examination of the Calcutta University in December next. This shows a steady increase. The numbers were, in 1857, 244; 1858, 464; 1859, (March) 706; 1859, (December) expected, 800. We do not envy the examiners their work.

KIMCHUT.—The Dacca News recommends the use of the paper called Kimchut, prepared at a village of the same name, twenty miles from Katmandoo, for all valuable records. In durability and pliability it seems to be superior to vellum, and the second quality can be manufactured of any size up to thirty feet by twelve at from Rs. 9 to 13 a maund. It withstands the ravages of insects. It is sized with a weak solution of oxide of arsenic and mucilage of rice, and afterwards polished by rubbing with a glass stand. The natives assert that it lasts for 400 years, and the News has a Sanscrit MS., written on Kimchut 152 years ago, and now in a state of perfect preservation. We are not told of what fibre it is made. The destruction of records in Indian offices is enormous. The gaol paper used is sized with a preparation of rice in which worms breed.

MOZUFFERPORE, Oct. 7.—The indigo manufacturing season at Tirhoot is at last closed, and though the Khoontie crop has, in a great measure, disappointed the expectations of the planters, still they have no reason at all to be dissatisfied with the out-turn of the present season. Each factory has made some 25 per cent. more indigo than it did last year. Since the 30th September it has been raining here steadily almost day and night; this will ensure to the Tirhoot planters a crop next season; in fact, their prospects, as they themselves say, are magnificent. Sickness in the district was very rife lately; but this change of weather will, I expect, have a most beneficial effect. The wearied doctors are, therefore, looking forward to a little repose from their labours. Indigo seed is at a premium: banking at a discount.

—10th October.—We have had three or four days of heavy rain, which has flooded the whole country and shut up the manufacturing. Several concerns have made very excellent seasons, and the proprietors will have both pockets full of money. They now look upon the late downfall with exultation, and promise such an abundance of "moisture" for next year as shall secure a crop and not give seed agents a chance of selling "chance" seed. We hope all their expectations will be fully realised, for Indigo planters must be successful or India must go to ruin several years before her time. It is also certain that the tax on beer, dress, tobacco and other articles of consumption, with the Income-tax and divers other monstrosities, will drive us all out of the land, unless Providence is kind and keeps Lord Canning safe where he cannot interfere with rain and vegetation, in which case Indigo would soon become unknown.—Englishman.

TORTURE IN THE PUNJAB.—From the Punjab we learn that a case of torture has recently been brought to light at Umballah. It appears that a prisoner, with the view of extorting a confession, was hung up to a tree, so that his toes just touched the ground. Three days after the man died, and the Thanadar, Tahseeldar, and Thana Mohurrir of Roopur, the parties implicated in the case, were committed for trial, on the charge of culpable homicide and torture. The result of the trial was that the Thanadar, although acquitted of the charge of culpable homicide, was "convicted of torturing a prisoner for the purpose of extorting confession," and sentenced to imprisonment for five years, a fine of Rs. 500, and proscription from Government employment. The Tahseeldar and Mohurrir were convicted of wilful concealment of the fact of the torture, and sentenced to be proscribed from Government employment, and the former to a fine also of Rs. 500.

A HOAX.—The Dacca News thus notices one of Professor Holloway's puffs:—"An old number of the Phoenix by chance fell into our hands, and on cursorily glancing our eyes over it, we read a puff of Holloway's, the prince of advertisers and father of quackery, to the following effect:—

'Holloway's pills a certain cure for dropsy. To Professor Holloway. Sir,—I am an old resident of Burrissaul, and for the last five years had laboured under an incurable case of dropsy, which rendered life miserable, and my general appearance more like an inflated bladder than anything human; failing in every means I had at last recourse to your invaluable pills, which in a short time restored me to health, &c.—Yours, A. BISTIS MASSAYK.'

Now Burrissaul being a district only three days' distance from this, and happening to know the names of almost all the residents of that small, yet pretty station, we began to be somewhat doubtful as to the truth of the above advertisement, but on a reperusal we were instantly assured of the article being altogether a hoax. For A. Bistis Massayk read "A Bhistee's mussuck," and the hoax becomes revealed instantaneously. We are, indeed, surprised that the agents of Professor Holloway did not see the letter addressed to them in the same light."

PERSIA.—The Russians lately took possession of the Island of Asciurade, which commands the Bay of Asterabad. The Persians have protested against the act, and demanded the same privileges for their flag in the Caspian Sea as the Russians. Mr. Khanikoff, the Russian Consul-general at Tabreez, has not had much success in his attempt to penetrate into Afghanistan, on a supposed scientific exploration. When near the frontier, Dost Mahomed sent him a messenger to acquaint him of the dangers both he and his party might have to encounter if they proceeded any further. Khanikoff took the hint, and prudently retraced his footsteps. Prussia having just concluded a commercial treaty with Persia, will, in future, be represented by an envoy at the Court of Teheran, although there is not a single Prussian subject in Persia. Count Hesse, intimate councillor of the King of Prussia, has been appointed to the post, and is now on his way to Teheran, via St. Petersburg, Astrakan and Reht.

PRIZE ESSAY.—A Madras Civilian offers a prize of Rs. 200 for the best Essay, in English or Canarese, "On the Religious Belief of the Hindoos," showing its Vedic form, the changes it has undergone, and the state of mind of the natives, especially in South India, on the subject. A further prize of Rs. 100 is to be given if the essayist shows the failure of Hindooism and the sufficiency of Christianity to satisfy the spiritual wants of man. The Bangalore Missionaries are the adjudicators. Essays are to be sent to Mr. Rice there, before 1st July, 1860.

SCHOOL OF ARTS.—Dr. Hunter, of the Madras School of Arts, has given Government a detailed account of the mode in which he spent his eighteen months' sick leave in England. He visited some seventy of the principal manufactories, schools, and galleries of arts, museums, and institutions. He found that "an interest has been excited in Great Britain regarding the defective state of the fine arts in India, compared with the mechanical dexterity and knowledge of the principle of design and colour possessed by both the Hindoos and Mahomedans. In many manufactories and schools of design in Great Britain, the shawls, carpets, embroidery, inlaying in metals, filagree, and other delicate manufactures of India, are held up as the best specimens for study and imitation." The Madras Art School, within the last ten years, has turned out 1,800 pupils who paid for their instruction, and of whom more than 400 have obtained remunerative employ. Applications were received also from twenty-six schools and several gaoles in India, for advice or assistance on the subject of art and manufacture.

TANJORE BONDS.—The Madras Times comments on a notification of the Governor-general in which he expresses himself as "graciously pleased" to receive subscriptions to the new 5½ per cent. loan from the holders of Tanjore Bonds, half in cash and half in that paper. The Bonds are now selling at 2½ per cent. discount, and the new loan paper at 5½. The "privilege" accordingly resolves itself into a loss of some 4 per cent. Such and so fruitless are the petty expedients of Indian finance. The Governor-general announces this boon, with the fact before him that the Tanjore Bonds are to be paid off at par.

ROMANIZED ALPHABETS.—The Government of Madras has taken legislative action of a kind in the matter of Romanizing native words. It has directed all officials to adhere to the following rules:—"1st.—When native terms can be suitably represented in official correspondence by English equivalents the English word should be used. 2nd.—When native terms are introduced into official correspondence they should be expressed in English letters, according to the system originally recommended by Sir William Jones, and since adopted, with partial variations, by the Asiatic Society, the Madras Literary Society, and by Professor Wilson in his glossary of Indian official terms. 3rd.—No letters should be introduced into any native word which do not exist in the original, and those which do exist should be expressed strictly in accordance with the scheme. 4th.—The only exception from this rule should be in the case of the names of particular places, which have become stereotyped by long usage in a conventional form, such as Negapatam, Masulipatam, Vizagapatam, &c." Precisely. That officials may learn Sir William Jones' system, Government promise to publish lists of words and a vowel scale, but conclude the order with that remark.

FORT ST. GEORGE.—The projected improvements in Fort St. George are fast being carried out at a cost of Rs. 4,88,060. They will render it thoroughly defensible, and fit for the healthy and comfortable accommodation of a European regiment. On the sea-face the guns are to be raised three feet above the present level, on traversing platforms, and to fire over the rampart, en barbette, so as to ensure a much greater range of fire for the powerful battery. The men will be quite covered, as the ramparts will have a total height of seven feet and a half. The fort is to be thoroughly provided with drains and sanitary accommodation. Several of the public offices are to be removed outside, and the rest will be collected on the south side of the fort. Oil gas is to be introduced, at an expense of Rs. 12,000. A large open railway-roof is to be constructed, under which will be a soldiers' gymnasium. The barracks contain accommodation for 1,030 men, allowing 1,000 cubic feet for each soldier, exclusive of verandahs, staff sergeants' quarters, library, lavatories, store-rooms, and the quarters assigned to the adjutant and quartermaster.

KIDNAPPING AT ALLEPEY.—Major Drury, assistant resident at Travancore, has brought to the notice of Government a case of kidnapping at this place. It appears, according to the commercial agent, Mr. Crawford, "that the disgraceful practice is frequent and common on the coast." The facts, as stated by Major Drury, are as follows:—"In the present instance, it appears that a boy, nine or ten years of age, while playing in the bazaar, was enticed from his companions, under the false pretences of an Arab, who told the child that he was his brother, and that he wished to take him on board ship to their own country. The boy was then carried away, though not without cries and resistance. The report of the child's abduction having reached the commercial agent, he instantly despatched a boat to the vessel to bring back the boy. The vessel was on the point of sailing, and but for the timely exertions of Mr. Crawford the child could never have been rescued. The name of the ship is the Fuzul Currim, Nacoda Munjee Laljee, bound to Singapore, and last from Muscat. The occurrence took place on the 13th September." Government on the 1st October directed the assistant resident to communicate with his Highness the Rajah on the subject of his letter, "and forcibly to impress upon him the heinous nature of the practice adverted to, and the necessity for adopting the most prompt and vigorous measures for its suppression. Major Drury will report to Government the steps which the Rajah may take for that object."

NORTH ARCOT.—The Madras Government has approved of the arrangements made by the Inspector-general of Mofussil police for reorganising the police of North Arcot. That district contains an area of 7,526 square miles, and a population of 14,52,549. It is estimated that the force, constabulary and village, will cost in round numbers three lakhs and fifty thousand rupees per annum. To meet this expenditure assets to the extent of two lakhs and sixty thousand are available, so that there will be a deficit. It has been pointed out to the Government of India by this Government that the expense of the police establishment in North Arcot will exceed that of any other district, in consequence of its greater size and the small amount of police funds available. The sanction of the Government of India to these arrangements has been applied for.

LOCAL IMPROVEMENT.—The Madras Times informs us that Sir Charles Trevelyan has sanctioned the junction of the Southern or Sadras Canal with the Northern or Cochrane's. This will effect an important local improvement, giving nearly 100 miles of back water communication from Doorgarazapatam, near Vellore, to Sadras. The traffic on these canals is immense.

BEATSON'S HORSE.—The 2nd regiment of Beatson's Horse has been ordered up from Aurungabad to Baitool, to operate against any of the rebels who may cross the Nerbudda southwards.

THE LUNGERKANAS.—The Board of Revenue has submitted to Government a report for the official year 1858-59, on these charitable institutions in the districts of Coimbatore, Nellore, Kurnool, Tanjore, North Arcot, South Arcot and Bellary. The total number of persons relieved was 2,58,554; the expenditure was Rs. 15,363-5-11, and the sum sanctioned was Rs. 17,935-5-11, showing a saving of Rs. 2,572-3-6; the expenditure was Rs. 3941-1-1 in excess of that of the preceding year, owing, principally, to the high price of grain, and to the fact that two institutions in South Arcot and Bellary had been included for the first time in the annual report; Government was pleased to find that the annual report had been submitted with greater punctuality than usual. On the 28th September, Government approved of the site of a new burning-ground, in lieu of the one near the lines of the Sapper Militia, and requested the Municipal Commissioners to prohibit the further use of the latter, as well as of the one near the General Hospital Bridge.

COLONEL COTTON, the Chief Engineer of the Madras Irrigation Company, along with his brother, Col. A. Cotton, has determined on commencing operations just below the confluence of the Tumbudra and Kistna. A bund is to be thrown across this point. There is abundance of building materials, and the soil, which is now covered by jungle, consists of rich red and black loam. The great water channels are to be made available for both irrigation and carriage. Government, it is said, is to purchase the water from the company at a certain fixed rate, and deal directly with the Ryots.

ROCK SALT.—Mr. Acworth, the agent and manager of the Madras Railway, recently informed the Madras Literary Society that one of the railway engineers, en route to Cuddapah, had discovered on a table a piece of rock salt, and that he was informed it came from about five miles west of Kircumbady. The committee of the Literary Society has brought the matter to the notice of Government, and a copy of the correspondence has been submitted to Mr. Oldham, the Superintendent of the Geological survey of India, with a request that he will favour Government with any observations that may occur to him on the subject. Inquiries are to be made in the locality indicated, as to the existence of rock salt, its quantity, if any geological conditions, and so forth, and a specimen is to be forwarded to Government for inspection.

THE UNCOVENANTED CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATION.—No candidate under sixteen years of age is allowed to go up for examination; but, in answer to an application from Captain Rideout, officiating secretary of the Military Male Orphan Asylum, Government has allowed orphans educated at that institution to appear for examination at the age of fifteen years, at which age the boys are compelled to leave the school; but the boys are not to enter the public service until they have attained the sixteenth year.

THE CIVIL ENGINEERING COLLEGE.—Government, on the 26th Sept., approved of a proposal, submitted by Captain Winscom, Principal of the above college, for a course of geological lectures. The lectures are to take place twice a-week, in October, November, and December of each year. The sanction of the Government of India to these arrangements has been applied for. The lecturer will be one of Mr. Oldham's assistants.

THE COLLECTORATE PRESSES.—The report of the Board of Revenue for the official year 1858-59 on the working of the Collectorate Presses has been forwarded to Government. At the end of 1857-58 there were five districts (Canara, Tinnevely, Chingleput, Kurnool, and Vizagapatam) without presses; their wants in this respect have been supplied, and each district in the Presidency has now a printing establishment of its own. The only districts that do not publish Gazettes are Vizagapatam and Kurnool. There has been a large falling off in the number of subscribers, in consequence of postage having been levied. In Chingleput the number has fallen from 300 to 46, in Coimbatore from 80 to 25, and in Malabar from 318 to 17. The Board expressed a hope that, seeing the usefulness of these publications, Government would allow them to circulate through the post free of charge; but Government observed that it was not in its power to authorise any deviation from the postal rules; any proposition from the Board with regard to fixing the subscriptions so low as to insure a wide circulation without entailing any loss would be duly considered.

The estimated value of the work done by the presses during the year is Rs. 42,298-6-4; the amount of funds available was Rs. 29,504; and the expenditure was Rs. 19,498. In all the districts except Cuddapah (where the charges had exceeded the funds available by Rs. 109-2-2) the financial result had been favourable.

NATIVE CREDULITY.—A strange report has got afloat among the natives in Madras and its suburbs to the effect that the Sirkar requires 165 children, for the purpose of sacrificing them on the pier; their bodies to be afterwards buried under the foundations of that structure. This report is particularly prevalent at St. Thome and Triplicane, where it has created a great panic. How the report originated is unknown; but its author or authors have skillfully managed to prevent the authorities hearing anything of the matter, for the people say that the Sirkar has ordered the magistrates to fine any one who complains of the loss of his child in the sum of ten pagodas. Incredible though it may appear, this report is really believed by the natives, and as some children actually have disappeared, they triumphantly point to this fact as a proof of its correctness. With regard to the disappearance of those children, it is supposed that they have been kidnapped and sent to Pondicherry, for the purpose of being shipped thence to Bourbon. If this be so, it is possible that these kidnappers may have set the report afloat in order that they might carry on their operations unsuspected.

EDUCATION IN SCINDE.—The Scindian publishes a report which shows the state of English and vernacular education in Scinde. In the English schools there are 302 pupils. The Kurrachee School has 126, of whom 2 are Jews, 9 Mahomedans, 13 Christians, 20 Parsees, and 76 Hindoos. Of the 14 students of the class for training Scindee teachers 10 were held qualified for appointments. These results are by no means trifling for a country like Scinde. The officials take a warm interest in the schools, so that there is no expenditure for inspection. The whole costs Government Rs. 25 a month.

COLONEL JAMES CREAGH, of the 86th foot, late Brigadier Commanding at Kurrachee, has been permitted to retire from the service on full pay, under the provisions of the 37th clause of the Royal Warrant of the 14th October, 1858. This officer entered the army in 1810, and has therefore been forty-nine years in the service. The Colonel has also been granted a good service pension of £100 per annum.

THE RAILWAY.—The line of railway between Egutpoora and Nassick being in a very forward state, it is expected that it will be opened for public traffic about April next. This portion of the line has been constructed by Mr. J. Jackson, who has spared no pains or expense in pushing forward the work. The portion of the line between Wassind and Egutpoora has been constructed by Mr. Jamsetjee Dorabjee, a Parsee contractor, who has also made every effort to complete his contract within the time specified, in spite of the great difficulties he has had to contend with, not the least of which has been the construction of a large and costly viaduct, a work which, we are informed, merits the highest commendation. The railway line from Decksal to Barsee road was opened for public traffic on the 24th October. The Barsee road is 227 1/2 miles from Bombay.

CHINA.

HONG KONG, October 13.—The London mail of the 26th August arrived here on the 8th instant.

Exchange on London has sunk to 4s. 9d. and 4s. 9 1/2 d. at six months' sight. Exchange at Shanghai was 6s. 7 1/2 d. to 6s. 7 1/2 d. Freighters are still dull. There has been little demand for imports at Canton, but a good demand at Shanghai. There has been a good business in teas and silks done during the fortnight.

Since the despatch of last home mail nothing has occurred of importance affecting our relations with the Chinese. There has been no more rioting at Shanghai, but we learn that an European regiment is to be sent from Calcutta to that place, in order to provide for the safety of the foreign residents. We regret to notice from the tone of the Indian papers that people at a distance are making a great deal too much of the late Shanghai riot. It has not appeared that it really had anything to do either with the Taku defeat or the Coolie traffic; and we have little doubt that it really arose from the feelings of irritation which the police employed by foreigners frequently and unnecessarily raise among the Chinese. The man who was killed was an expoliceman, and had probably made himself extremely unpopular.

Admiral Hope, who has now entirely recovered from the wounds he received at Taku, is at present in this harbour, on board the Chesapeake. So also is the French Admiral, Paget, of Tahitian renown, who has come out to relieve Admiral Rigault de Genouilly, who has suffered much from sickness during the latter part of his stay in the East. It is expected that Admiral Paget will commence a new system of policy in Cochin China, and not attempt to make movements unless they promise to be more effectual than those hitherto made. On the 15th September there was another combat between the French and the Cochin Chinese, in which both sides are said to have suffered greatly.

Mr. Lay has recovered from the wounds he received in the riot at Shanghai, and is at present in Canton, engaged in organizing that branch of the new Chinese customs service. The object of that new service is to secure to the Chinese Government the full payment of the duties which it has a right to claim, and the means proposed for that end are the employment of a number of foreigners acquainted with the Chinese language.

From Japan there is some important intelligence. On the 25th August a Russian officer of the name of Maufet, and one of his sailors, were barbarously murdered in the streets of Yokama, a village close to Kanagawa. This is said to have been done by some Japanese officials who had been degraded at the instance of one or other of the foreign representatives. General Mouravieff was fortunately at Yeddo at the time with several men-of-war, and refused to leave until the murder was fully atoned for. The consequences are, that the chief official at Kanagawa has been dismissed by the Japanese Government, and, according to report, the southern part of the large island of Saghalien has been ceded to the Russians. It was expected that there would be a change of ministry at Yeddo, and one favourable to foreigners. The dollar question still remains unsettled.

To the long list of steamers lost upon the coast of China this year we have to add a very old friend of the community—the P. and O. steamer Canton, which has been broken in two, in the recent gale, on a rock before the Praia Grande at Macao. It was advertised for sale at the time this accident occurred, and its remains will be sold in a few days, the boilers and machinery being uninjured.

Some efforts have been made to induce Sir Hercules Robinson to remove Mr. Tarrant, the editor of the late Friend of China, from the criminal side of the gaol into the building appropriated for debtors, but hitherto without success, as we understand that his Excellency considers himself entitled to remit but not to modify the sentence; and is not disposed to regard Mr. Tarrant's serious and unproved libels against Colonel Caine with that leniency which those do whose sense of propriety in these matters has been somewhat dulled by the extraordinary quantity of libels which have been freely published in Hong Kong within the last few years.

There has been another heavy gale, which has done some injury to the shipping in harbour, but it did not partake of the character of a typhoon.

At last a sanatorium is to be erected on Victoria Peak by the military authorities.—Overland China Mail.

LIEUT.-COLONEL CAINE.—It is seldom indeed that a European lives fifty-five years in Asia, and still rarer that he returns home as hale and hearty as Lieut.-Col. Caine, who has just left this place. The Colonel came out to India when a boy, in 1804, when Lord Lake was fighting with Holkar, and ere the Mahratta country, the North-West Provinces, Gujerat, and in fact the greater part of our present possessions in India, had fallen under British power. We have before made some mention of his military services in India, where he served with distinction, either on the staff or immediately under the eye of several of the most distinguished general officers who there held commands, and it is to be regretted, for his own interests, that he ever left the military service for civil employ in Hong Kong. When he first came to Hong Kong, in 1841, there was only a line of mat-sheds along the beach where we have now Queen's Road, and a few huts in the place now occupied by the garden of Messrs. Dent and Co.; and on the first occupation of the island he lived in a mat shed. As chief magistrate, Colonel Caine adopted a very decided military line of action, and made his name respected, if not even feared, among the Chinese. Sir Henry Pottinger, writing to the Duke of Wellington on his behalf, offered "the strongest testimony to his unceasing zeal and laborious exertions, combined with great judgment. Up to the conclusion of the war, the safety and well-being of H. M.'s subjects who had located themselves on the island were mainly owing to his individual efforts and example." Sir John Davis made him Colonial Secretary, and on going up to Canton in 1847 left him as Commandant and Acting Governor, with all confidence that he would ensure the safety of the colony. Sir George Bonham accorded him equal praise, and we believe the Colonial-office is aware of the value of the services rendered by him during the long and continuous period of his connection with it. Just before leaving for the honourable retirement which he has so well deserved complimentary addresses were presented to him both by the respectable Chinese and the Indians in this place. Since his unsolicited appointment as Lieut.-governor, in 1854, he has had almost nothing to do, except in the Executive Council, the proceedings of which are, of course, secret; but there his firmness and judgment have doubtless been of service.—China Mail.

CEYLON.

COLOMBO, Oct. 29.—Five vessels have sailed for Great Britain with coffee since last mail, taking of plantation 8,796 cwt., and of native 5,874 cwt.; making a total of 14,470 cwt.

The Stranger, loaded with nearly 3,000 cwt. of coffee from Ceylon, is reported as having foundered.

The able Report of the Director of our Botanic Gardens for the last year proves that the enumeration of our indigenous flora is being carried on with zeal, while every exertion is being made to introduce and cultivate useful and ornamental exotics, and to form a museum of economic botany in connection with the Peradenia Gardens. We are informed that, from the nucleus already formed, information has been obtained to enable a gentleman to procure and export some of our vegetable products, which are said to be of considerable commercial value.

The north-east monsoon may be said to have fairly set in. During the latter part of this week we have had several heavy showers of rain, accompanied with thunder and lightning, the usual indications of a change of monsoon at this time of the year.

In our last summary we stated that the appointment of a young and inexperienced civilian, Mr. Wright, to the Judgeship of a very litigious district, Matura, had given much dissatisfaction. We are now glad to say that a joint magistrate judge has since been appointed, and we hope that Mr. Wright and Mr. Morgan will be able to work up the arrears which have accumulated in the courts at Matura.

The Legislative Council have been occupied with discussing ordinances to "make further provisions for the postponement of trials"—to "amend and consolidate the laws relating to courts of request," and to "grant exclusive privileges to inventors." In the discussion of the last bill on the 26th instant, the Queen's Advocate introduced a clause in reference to extending the jurisdiction of the Colombo District Court, in order to meet any doubts that might hereafter arise. This was objected to by Mr. Lorenz, by an amendment, which latter was carried by eight to two.

The railway continues to engage the attention of the public. A memorial was presented to the merchants, planters, house and landowners of Kandy, praying that the colony might be freed from the agreement with the railway company—although they agree with the community at large in wishing to have a railway, if procurable at a reasonable cost. The colonists await with anxiety the final decision of the Duke of Newcastle.

The second sessions of the Supreme Court for the Southern Province were opened at Caltura on the 18th by the Chief Justice.—Overland Observer.

BURMAH.

EMBASSY TO AVA.—We see from the Rangoon Times that Colonel Phayre, the commissioner of Pegu, was to leave Rangoon on the 3rd of October, on his friendly embassy to the King of Ava. His Majesty expressed most loyal sentiments during the crisis of 1857-58, professing himself ready "to march down an army of 100,000 men, and sweep the sepoys into the sea," if they attempted to rise in Pegu. He is to be presented, among other gifts, with a full-length skeleton of the human body, carved out of sycamore, in the most elaborate and artistic manner, by Mr. Flower, curator of the Hunterian Museum, at an expense of £1,000.

THE FRENCH ADVENTURERS.—The King of Ava's dealings with the French are likely to be less cordial than heretofore. Their proposal for a twenty-five years' monopoly of the produce of the country startled him. "The English," he said, "dealt fairly with me. They fought for my country when they wanted it, and kept it when they got it. But you, under the pretence of benefiting me, wish to keep my kingdom for twenty-five years, and then, perhaps, for ever." The owner of the Alon Prah, disappointed in selling it to the king at the enormous price asked, has resolved to make a cruise to Java and Japan.

AN IMAGE FROM HEAVEN.—Great is the Diana of the Ephesians! The Burmese have now their Diana and Palladium. An image of Guadama has fallen from heaven near Rangoon, and the Burmese population are excited by the miracle. The women in gala dress, as at full moon, have turned out to worship. The image is about the size of the first joint of the little finger, and is said to be a pure diamond.

THE STRAITS.

PINANG.—The Pinang Gazette of the 24th Sept. informs us that the ill-feeling existing between two of the secret societies amongst the Chinese in Pinang, the Toh-peh-Kong and the Ho Seng, has again broke out in acts of violence, and that Beach-street and some of the other streets in George Town have been the scene of numerous riots and assaults. Houses have been broken into, the inmates assaulted, and their property destroyed. One man was crushed to death in a street row. The Chinese are also stated to be drawing natives of other races into their societies. Both Klings and Malays, and even Portuguese Christians, are said to belong to the Ho Seng Hoé. The Toh-peh-Kong is also reported to have recently admitted a number of Klings into its ranks. The evil was bad enough as long as the secret associations were confined to the Chinese, but the mischief is greatly increased when other races are drawn into them.

JAVA.

By the Dutch mail steamer Macassar we (Singapore Free Press) have Java papers to the 8th October.

The Governor-general was in such a bad state of health that, according to general report, he had sent a pressing request to the King to be relieved from his functions as soon as possible.

The preparations for the new expedition against Boni were proceeding, and it was expected to sail during the course of the present month. Eighteen sailing ships have been chartered by the Government for the transport of troops, stores, &c. The Hondelsblad remarks that at this season of the year the voyage to Macassar under sail will take at least a month, during which the troops must be crowded together and fed on salt meat and dry provisions. There is only one Government steamer available for towing, and although private steamers are procurable their services have not been secured. In taking up ships a preference is said to have been given to those carrying doctors, but, singularly enough, the same medical-provided vessels are being laden with coals and cattle, and not with troops! Little news had been received from Banjermassing. Lieutenant Bichon was murdered on the public road, and at the time of his funeral an attempt was made to surprise the fort at Banjermassing, but the attack was repulsed. Reinforcements had been sent from Sourabaya to Banjermassing. A telegraphic message was received at Batavia on the 5th instant from Samarang, stating that Gunung Lawang had been taken by Captain Schiff and a party of eighty men, with a loss to the enemy of thirty, and to the Dutch of six. The steamer Typannas had sunk through the explosion of her boilers, four men being injured. There were rumours of fresh troubles at Palembang and other parts on the east coast of Sumatra, but it was thought there was no good ground for them.

On the 3rd October Sir Robert McClure and the officers of H.M.'s steamship Esk, which is at present being repaired in the Dutch Government dock at Onrust, were entertained at dinner by the Captain Superintendent of the establishment and the other officers of the Dutch men-of-war then at Onrust. The entertainment passed off with great spirit, many toasts were drunk, and much enthusiasm was occasioned by the proposal, by one of the English officers, of the health of the ladies of Batavia, who were so astonishingly beautiful!

The Commissariat.

No. 1,406.—The hon. the President in Council, with the concurrence of H. E. the Gov. gen., is pleased, in substitution of the scale published in G.O. No. 507, of Oct. 30, 1858, to direct that the following shall, from the 15th instant, be the establishment of the commissioned staff of the army commissariat department in Bengal, subject to such further reduction as may hereafter be considered necessary:—

- 1 commissary general.
- 3 deputy commissaries general.
- 4 assistant commissaries general, 1st class.
- 4 assistant commissaries general, 2nd class.
- 6 deputy assistant commissaries general, 1st class.
- 6 deputy assistant commissaries general, 2nd class.
- 12 sub assistant commissaries general, 1st class.
- 8 sub assistant commissaries general, 2nd class.

And further, that as the contingent augmentation to the warrant and non-commissioned staff of the army commissariat department, sanctioned under the exigencies of the service during the mutinies, in G.O. Nos. 129 and 495 of 1858, is no longer necessary to the extent granted, the establishment of warrant and non-commissioned staff of the army commissariat department in Bengal shall, from the 15th inst., consist of,

- 1 deputy commissary.
- 2 assistant commissaries.
- 4 deputy assistant commissaries.
- 20 conductors.
- 35 sub-conductors.
- 107 sergeants.

The commissioned warrant and non-commissioned officers will severally take their position in the above grades, according to the order of seniority in which they stand in the department, the supernumeraries to the establishment now authorized being placed at the disposal of the C. in C. from the dates on which they may be relieved from their present duties.

Rearming Native Infantry.

Head Quarters, Simla, Sept. 30.

The C. in C., in calling the attention of officers commanding divisions to G.O. No. 1,277 of the 9th inst., conveying the decision of H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council as to the disposal of those regts. and portions of regts. of the old native army of Bengal, the retention or disbanding of which had been hitherto undetermined, is pleased to direct that the instructions contained therein, regarding the disbanding of the 2nd and 25th regts. N.I., and the re-arming of the 32nd, 43rd, and 63rd regts. N.I., and Calcutta Militia (henceforward to be designated the "Allipore Regt."), shall be carried into immediate effect; the worn-out men of the four regts. last mentioned, and those of bad or doubtful character, being dealt with in the manner indicated in the order above referred to.

With respect to those details of native regts. marginally enumerated,* whose retention in the service has been decided upon by Govt., his Lordship directs that nominal and numerical rolls of the men composing them may be at once transmitted to headquarters by the officers in whose divisions they are serving, with a view to the necessary steps being taken for posting them to corps remaining on the strength of the Bengal army.

With regard to the 11th irreg. cav., after all men of bad or doubtful character, and those undesirable or remaining in the service, have been discharged with subsistence, and worn-out men disposed of under the pension rules, a nominal roll of the remainder, showing what corps of irregular cavalry they desire to join, is to be furnished without delay.

Nominal Rolls of the 74 men of the late 34th regt. N.I., incorporated with the 2nd N.I. (Grens.) since last year, will also be forwarded, to enable their transfer, in equal proportions to the 32nd and 43rd regts. N.I., to be announced in G.O.

Nominal rolls of the subadar and the six havildars of the 25th N.I., ordered to be rearmed and retained in the service on the disbandment of their corps, will also be transmitted, with a view to their final disposal.

Present state of the 32nd, 43rd, 63rd, and Allipore regts. to be furnished as soon as the discharges and invalidings above directed have taken place.

All young officers of the above regts. who may have already done duty with European regts. of H.M.'s British or Indian army for a period of six months, will at once proceed to join their own corps; and those who have not yet completed the regulated period of service with a European regt. will, on its completion, be ordered to do so by officers commanding divisions.

Reward for Service.

Military Dept., Sheergutty, Oct. 21.—The Gov. gen. has received authority from H.M.'s government to grant the boon of two years' service to those men of the local army who have not taken their discharge under the G. O. No. 883, of the 20th June last.

H. E. has also received authority to permit such men as have taken their discharge, and are not compromised by part taken in any act of insubordination connected with the question of discharge, to enlist for service in China in any of H.M.'s regiments of the line, or H.M.'s artillery or marines, which may be now in China or may be proceeding there. Soldiers so enlisting will receive a bounty of (50) fifty rupees, upon the condition that they enlist for ten years' service.

The foregoing announcement is made for general information. Further details on the subject will be published without delay; and until such details are published, volunteering will not commence.

R. J. H. BIRCH, Maj. gen., Sec. to the Govt. of India with the Gov. gen.

Court Martial.

LIEUT. ROBERT YALLOP STOKES, 1st BATTN. H.M.'s 8TH FOOT.

Adj. Gen.'s Office, H.M.'s Forces, Calcutta, Oct. 19. 11d. Qrs., Simla, Sept. 23, 1859.

At a general court martial, assembled at Cawnpore, on Monday, Sept. 12, 1859, Lieut. R. Y. Stokes, 1st battn. H.M.'s 8th or the King's regt. of foot, was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—With conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline in having at Futtehghur, on Aug. 8, 1859, appeared in a state of intoxication at the station Kurn Godown, where he had been ordered to attend on duty as a member of a regimental committee of survey; several non-commissioned officers of the regiment being present at the time.

Finding.—Guilty.

Sentence.—To be reprimanded in such a way as his Excellency the C. in C. in India may direct.

Approved and confirmed,

(Signed) CLYDE, General C. in C. Simla, Sept. 21, 1859.

REMARKS BY HIS LORDSHIP THE C. IN C. IN INDIA.

The punishment awarded is very lenient for the offence of which Lieut. Stokes has been convicted, * 1st, 7th, 8th, 11th, 12th, 15th, 17th, 29th, 30th, 57th, 39th, 40th, 42nd, 46th, 50th, 52nd, 67th.

but, taking into consideration the whole of the circumstances of the case, and the very high character that he has received from his commanding officer and others of the regiment, the C. in C. has been pleased to accord his confirmation of the sentence.

Lieut. Stokes is to be released from arrest and directed to return to his duty, and Lord Clyde trusts that his recent peril will be a warning to him, and that he will bear in mind that the weak state of his health should be a bar to his indulging in wine, even to a moderate extent, unless under professional advice.

By order of H.E. the C. in C.

W. L. PAKENHAM, Col.,
Adj. gen. H.M.'s Forces in India.

Arms and Accoutrements.

Hd. Qrs., Simla, Sept. 28.—The C. in C. is pleased to direct that arms and accoutrements shall henceforward be furnished, in the proportion of ten sets only for every hundred men, to all bodies of European recruits in progress from the presidency to the upper provinces; and that the following proportion of these articles shall, for the present, be established for the recruit depots:—

Meerut . . . . .	300
Barrackpore . . . . .	500
Dum Dum . . . . .	500

Remittance of Donation Batta.

Head Qrs., Fort William, Oct.—No. 1,426.—In continuation of G.G.O. No. 1,235, of Aug. 30, it is notified for general information, that Govt. have been pleased to extend the privilege of remitting Donation Batta for serv. in the field during the campaigns which have arisen out of the mutiny in India, to such officers as have invalided and returned to England.

Alteration of Military Titles.

Head Qrs., Simla, Sept. 30.—The C. in C. directs that instead of the terms "Honourable Company's Service," "Her Majesty's Indian Military Service," "Her Majesty's Service," "Her Majesty's Indian Service," which are variously used at present in the Form of Regimental Committee proceedings in the cases of soldiers taking their discharge, the words "Her Majesty's Regiment of Bengal European Cavalry," or "Her Majesty's Regiment of Bengal European Infantry," or "Her Majesty's Regiment of Bengal Artillery," are to be substituted in all such committee proceedings.

The form, as laid down after para 25, Section XXVII, page 184, of the Military Regulations, is to be corrected accordingly; and the words, "Adjutant General's Office" and "Adjutant General of the Army" are to be inserted in place of "Town Major's Office" and "Town Major of Fort William," at page 187 of the same Code.

Re-enlistment and Bounty.

Fort William, Military Dept., Oct. 8.—In G. O. by government of India, No. 883, dated June 20, the soldiers of H.M.'s Eur. forces in India were thus informed:—

"The representations of the men, as recorded by the courts of inquiry assembled for this purpose at Meerut and other stations, will be transmitted for the consideration of H.M.'s government. But the Viceroy and Governor general in Council distinctly announces that he is not authorized to hold out any hope that the government of H.M. will recede from the decision to which it has already come, in regard to re-enlistment and bounty.

"The offer of discharge now determined upon will be made under arrangements to be ordered by the C. in C. respectively at the three Presidencies; and the decision of every man who elects to remain in the service is to be entered in the regimental records, and will be considered final."

2. The reference to H.M.'s Government promised in first of the foregoing paragraphs was made without delay.

Meanwhile a despatch, dated Aug. 18, 1859, No. 274, was received from the Secretary of State for India, in which, with reference to the earlier proceedings of courts of enquiry which had been transmitted by Government, it is observed as follows:—

"These letters contain further details of the circumstances reported in your military despatch No. 66, in reply to which the general views of H.M.'s govt. were indicated, and a full discretion was given you to adopt such measures as, under the varying aspect of the movement among the local European troops, you may have deemed most conducive to the public interests.

"The papers which you have subsequently forwarded have proved incontestably the prevalence of the feeling of dissatisfaction among the men, and in most instances the sincerity of their conviction (mistaken though it was) that their engagement to serve as soldiers in India had terminated with the existence of the East India Company."

8. The Secretary of State has now replied to the reference in the following passages of a despatch, No. 302, dated the 31st of August, 1859:—

"In acknowledging the receipt of your letter No. 90, in the Military Department, dated 24th June last, but which did not reach me till the 11th August, I have to convey to you the full approval of H.M.'s Government of the measures which you have taken in granting the option of discharge and a free passage home to those European soldiers of the local army to whom the G.O. issued by you on the 20th June, 1859, is applicable.

"The results of the courts of enquiry held at the several stations of the army have clearly established the prevalence of the conviction amongst the European soldiers, that they had a right to an option in regard to the transfer of their services from the E. I. Company to the Crown.

"The instructions conveyed in my despatch* gave you full powers to act in such manner as you might judge best for the good of the public service.

"The course which you have taken in pursuance of the discretion so entrusted to you entirely approved."

4. The Governor general in Council, in publishing these communications, desires to express his firm conviction that the men of H.M.'s Indian forces who have, with much good sense, and with a steadiness which does them the highest credit, elected to continue in the honourable service of her Majesty will, by a faithful and complete observance of their duty, continue to maintain the high character which they have already won by their exemplary behaviour in quarters, and their devoted gallantry in the field.

R. J. H. BIRCH, Major general,
Sec. to the Govt. of India.

Commands in India.

No. 1,377 of 1859.—Under instructions from her Majesty's Government, his Excellency the Governor-general in Council notifies the cancellation of the Government General Order No. 439, of the 26th May, 1859, under which a senior officer of H.M.'s service arriving in India supercedes a junior officer of the same service holding a brigade or divisional command, and H.E. directs that the rule of selection for commands in India shall henceforth apply alike to both her Majesty's British and Indian forces.

In carrying this rule into effect, it is notified that, while the interests of the public service must be paramount, the departure from seniority will only take place when adherence to it would be prejudicial to the service.

Accommodation to Passengers, I.N.

Bombay Castle, Oct. 14.

No. 187.—The existing regulations do not specify the class of accommodation to be accorded to native officers of Government, when provided with passages in Government vessels. Instances have occurred of late, in which the absence of specific regulation has caused inconvenience.

Similar inconvenience has occurred in the case of European gentlemen, whose relative rank in the service happened to be undefined.

Deputy collectors, superintendents, and assistants, and supernumerary assistants in the revenue survey; principal sudder ameens and moonsiffs; superintendents and assistant superintendents of police; uncovenanted magistrates; deputy superintendents of electric telegraphs; inspecting postmasters and mail superintendents; deputy commissioners of customs, and uncovenanted assistants to the commissioner of customs; assistants in the alienation department; civil engineers and assistant engineers; the director of public instruction; educational inspectors; and the principals and professors of Government colleges; are all entitled to be treated with the same courtesy, and to enjoy the same amount of accommodation as gentlemen holding appointments of corresponding importance, who may belong to the covenanted civil service or the army.

His lordship in council is satisfied that, in cases which are not provided for in the preceding paragraph, an officer commanding a vessel of H.M.'s Indian navy can have no difficulty in ascertaining the general position in the service, or in society, of any person whom he may be required to accommodate on board his vessel, and whose rank may not happen to have been precisely defined; and his lordship in council requires that officers of the I.N., under such circumstances, shall assign cabin accommodation to all persons, European or native, entitled to rank as gentlemen, and appropriate accommodation to others.

Re-enlistment.

Head Qrs., Poona, Oct. 19.—Under instructions from his lordship, the right hon. the Governor in Council, the C. in C. is pleased to announce that European soldiers discharged under the provision of G. O., No. 691, of the 4th July last, are allowed to re-enlist for ten years, for service in any of her Majesty's regiments now in, or proceeding to, China. Whether infantry, artillery, or marines, they will not be allowed to reckon former service, but, in addition to a bounty of Rs. 40, they will receive a fresh kit.

Discharged men will not be allowed to re-enlist for service in the local forces under any circumstances.

The order is to be made known to the men who have taken discharge under the provisions of the G. O. above quoted, and the requisite measures taken for the re-enlistment of such as may offer themselves, and are found fit.

Men re-enlisting at Bombay are to be attached to the depot at Colaba.

The Victoria Cross.

WAR OFFICE, Nov. 21.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her intention to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross on the undermentioned officer, non-commissioned officer, and private of her Majesty's 32nd regt. of foot, whose claims to the same have been submitted for her Majesty's approval, on account of acts of bravery performed by them at Lucknow, in India, as recorded against their several names, viz. :—

32nd Regiment.—Lieutenant (now Brevet major) S. H. Lawrence.—For distinguished bravery in a sortie on the 7th of July, 1857, made, as reported by Major Wilson, late deputy assistant adjutant general of the Lucknow garrison, "for the purpose of examining a house strongly held by the enemy in order to discover whether or not a mine was being driven from it." Major Wilson states that he saw the attack, and was an eye-witness to the great personal gallantry of Major Lawrence on the occasion, he being the first person to mount the ladder, and enter the window of the house, in effecting which he had his pistol knocked out of his hand by one of the enemy. Also, for distinguished gallantry in a sortie, on the 26th September, 1857, in charging with two of his men, in advance of his company, and capturing a 9-pounder gun.

32nd Regiment.—Corporal W. Oxenham.—For distinguished gallantry in saving the life of Mr. Capper, of the Bengal Civil Service, by extricating him from the ruins of a verandah, which had fallen on him, Corporal Oxenham being for ten minutes exposed to a heavy fire while doing so.

32nd Regiment.—Private W. Dowling.—For distinguished gallantry on the 4th of July, 1857, in going out with two other men, since dead, and spiking two of the enemy's guns. He killed a soubadar of the enemy by one of the guns. Also, for distinguished gallantry on the 9th of the same month, in going out again with three men, since dead, to spike one of the enemy's guns. He had to retire, the spike being too small, but was exposed to the same danger. Also, for distinguished bravery, on the 27th of September, 1857, in spiking an 18-pounder gun during a sortie, he being at the same time under a most heavy fire from the enemy.

NAVIGATION OF THE GANGES.—We are glad to find that the Oriental Inland Steam Company has constructed vessels of large size and power for the navigation of the Ganges. The first of these vessels is expected next week in the Mersey, from the Clyde, to receive her engines, which have been constructed by Messrs. Fawcett, the well-known engineers of this town. This vessel is 250 feet long, 30 feet beam, and will draw, with the machinery and fuel on board, about two feet of water; but for going to India, which she will do under sail and steam, she has been fitted with a deep box-keel, which will be removed on her arrival there. The barges which she will tow have been already despatched to India, about two months since, and will, it is expected, be ready for work on the arrival of the steamer there. Another similar steamer, belonging to the same company, is shortly expected here, to receive her engines, which have also been constructed by Messrs. Fawcett. This vessel will also sail out to India, and will thus be immediately at work. These steamers are of immense strength and engine-power; each of them will tow several barges, and each barge will carry about 500 measurement tons of cargo. The nominal power is 250 horses, but the engines are expected to work up to 1,000 horses. The barges belonging to the steamer have already been built by Messrs. Reid, and were shipped to Calcutta about two months ago. It is highly satisfactory to find that the Oriental Inland Steam Company are turning their attention to the Ganges at so early a period of their career. It is the best field for them in India, as appears plainly from the enormous dividends the existing Ganges companies have been paying—amounting in some cases to as much as 100 per cent. per annum—and those who are earliest there will reap the largest advantage.—Liverpool Albion.

To Correspondents.

Our correspondent, "JUSTUS ET PROPOSITI TENAX," must pardon us if we do not recognise any analogy between the two cases. The child of the Jew, Mortara, was not a free agent, like the Hindoo convert alluded to. The latter made a voluntary profession of faith, and had every opportunity afforded him of returning to the practices of his forefathers had he chosen to do so. We commend our correspondent for avowing his resolution to adhere to his principles, but he should take care that those principles are really sound. "Justice" should take precedence of "tenacity of purpose."

COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS FOR ADDISCOMBE.

On the 16th of January, 1860, the first examination will be held of candidates desirous to compete for admission to the Royal Indian Military College at Addiscombe, preparatory to obtaining commissions in the scientific branches of the Indian army. The number of appointments is thirty; and to be successful, at least 2,500 marks must have been attained, of which not less than 700 must be for pure, and 300 for mixed mathematics. No candidate can take up more than five of the following subjects, mathematics being indispensably one of them:—

	Marks.
1. Mathematics. { Pure—Arithmetic, Logarithms, Algebra, Geometry, Trigonometry, Conic Sections	2000
Mixed—Statics, Dynamics, Hydrostatics ..	1500
	— 3500
2. English Language, Literature, Composition, History, and Geography....	1500
3. Classics. { Language, Literature, Geography, and History of Ancient Rome .....	750
Ditto of Ancient Greece.....	500
	— 1250
4. Languages, Geography, and History of France	750
5. Languages, Geography, and History of India	1000
6. Experimental Science; i. e., Chemistry, Heat, Electricity, including Magnetism, Natural Sciences, Mineralogy, and Geology .....	1000
7. The use of Astronomical and Surveying Instruments .....	750
8. Drawing—Elementary Geometrical Drawing (including the use of drawing instruments), and Architectural, Engineering, Military, and Landscape Drawing .....	1250

If French and geometrical drawing be not selected as subjects of examination, any candidate omitting them will be required to show that he possesses at least such an elementary knowledge as will enable him to master both during his one year's residence at College. The legitimate expenses of the successful candidate are sufficiently reasonable: £50 per term paid in advance, £15. 5s. 6d. per annum for his uniform clothing, a small sum for books, &c., and pocket-money at the rate of 2s. 6d. a week, with 1s. additional for censors, and 2s. 6d. additional for sub-officers. The only point, indeed, open to remark is the clause requiring "the names and addresses of two persons residing in London or its vicinity, who engage to receive (the gentleman cadet) on application to that effect by the Lieutenant Governor." This condition appears quite unnecessary in these days of rapid transit and yet more rapid communication, and it may possibly have the effect of de-terrering otherwise eligible young men from passing through the ordeal, as it is not every provincial family that could comply with such a provision. For minor details we may refer our readers to the advertisement from the Military Department of the India-office; but it would be inexcusable to overlook the considerate and liberal undertaking on the part of the Secretary of State for India to allow "the sum of £100 to each cadet who may obtain a commission in the engineers or artillery, after a residence of two terms at the Addiscombe College." We may further mention that artillery cadets will undergo a professional training at Woolwich for six months, and engineer cadets at Chatham for twelve months; in both cases drawing full pay as commissioned officers.

A PAPER CURRENCY FOR INDIA.

THERE is at last some chance of a paper currency for India, though the details will probably be reserved for the special consideration of Mr. Wilson. The Madras Government appears to have imagined that the issue of three millions sterling would be sufficient for the requirements of all India, and yet it recommended that the notes—of various denominations but none of less value than ten rupees—should be declared a legal tender. In a like narrow spirit it insists only upon the advantages that would accrue to the Government, without apparently casting a single thought upon the immense accommodation such a measure would afford to the commercial community. It is to benefit the State as being equivalent to a loan without interest, and as furnishing new facilities for remittance, and thereby rendering it unnecessary to maintain such large and unprofitable balances in the Public Treasuries. But not a word is mentioned touching the convenience that would be derived by the mercantile classes, whether native or European, from the extended circulation. The Governor-general in Council expresses an opinion to the effect that if the notes were to be received generally in all British treasuries, the Government might be placed in difficulties in meeting their conversion. And such undoubtedly would be the case unless they were declared a legal tender, and convertible only at the three Presidencies, and, perhaps, at Lahore and Agra—or Allahabad, if that is really to be the new capital of the North-West-Provinces. As a legal tender the notes would speedily find favour with the native bankers, who would employ them in outlying districts where they themselves have no representative agents or correspondents, and thus increased facilities would be afforded to the internal commerce of British India. But if these notes are not placed on the same footing as a Bank of England note in this country, they will become liable to variation of price, and be subjected to discount according to the momentary credit of the Government, or the discontent of the population in any particular town. The Financial Secretary to the Government of India is disposed, however, to prefer making the notes renewable at the option of the public and convertible on demand. If so, their circulation will be confined to the presidency towns and the utility of the measure greatly impaired. He proposes, indeed, to issue local notes "convertible only at a few large treasuries, conveniently situated in circles of country from 300 to 400 miles in diameter." But to this suggestion several objections present themselves. In the first place, it will be no easy matter to overcome the feeling of distrust with which local notes would be regarded, and under no circumstances would they ever travel beyond the circle arbitrarily assigned to them, and thus would render very slight service to the trading community. The cost, moreover, of the necessary establishments would absorb all the profit, and thus the Government would fail to benefit by the troublesome innovation. Besides this, the greater the variety of notes, the greater will be the facility of passing forged ones. Where there is but one die for all India—and it is quite unnecessary to have separate dies for the different presidencies—the natives would soon become so accustomed to it that the cleverest counterfeit would be certain of detection. There may be some reason for the apprehension expressed by the Calcutta Council that, unless the power of issuing notes is carefully restricted, the Government might be tempted at a financial crisis to act dishonestly. No doubt the Indian Government must be the best judge of its own temptations and peculiar weaknesses, but it is rather startling to find the names of five English gentlemen, distinguished in their several walks of life, acknowledging their inclination to be dishonest rather than encounter a financial pressure. Perhaps at the present moment they are particularly susceptible, and imagine that they would even sign a melodramatic compact with the Evil One if he would only extricate them out of their present difficulties. Without entertaining such an unfavourable opinion of their honour as they themselves appear to do, we agree, however, with the members of the Council that the issue must be restricted, because otherwise no confidence could ever be placed in the solvency of the Public Treasury. At the same time, it is impossible to fix upon an unchangeable amount. For the present ten millions sterling for all India, gradually put into circulation, would probably be as much as could safely be attempted. But we are not equally convinced of the inexpediency of issuing notes of a lower denomination than ten rupees. The objections to One Pound Notes in England are correctly stated by the Financial Secretary, in the following words:—

"It is said that no cheques or bills of exchange are drawn for one pound; that such a mode of transacting business is too troublesome and expensive, that One Pound Notes drive the metallic currency out of circulation; that gold, in consequence, becomes more valuable abroad than at home; that it is sure, therefore, to be exported as a commodity; and that, on the occasion of panics, the consequences are most disastrous, from the paper securities ceasing to be negotiable, and from the supply of gold being altogether unequal to the demand."

But it must be remembered that gold is not the standard of currency in India, and there is very little chance of its exportation so long as the native taste for trinkets and golden ornaments continues—not to speak of their passion for hoarding. And if the tendency of the paper currency be to check the influx of silver, and thereby to relieve the constant drain upon this country, we cannot think the objection a very serious one. However, discretion is better than audacity, and, as a homely proverb hath it, "half a loaf is better than no bread." So, if the Government hesitate to issue five rupee notes, let us thankfully accept them for ten rupees as the lowest denomination. In a measure of such grave importance they may be excused for seeking the sanction of the British Parliament, though such a reference certainly has the appearance of an abdication of their proper functions and an acknowledgment of their incapacity to govern so vast an empire. Thus we are brought round, as usual, to the inevitable conclusion that the present system cannot last. India must be governed either from Calcutta or London, but it cannot be governed by a partnership with separate liabilities and decidedly limited "ability." A Calcutta Government is preferable, if a really able and experienced man were always placed at the head of affairs, instead of being chosen for his comparative poverty and inaptitude for home politics and party strife. But, as matters now stand, we give our vote in favour of a despotic Secretary of State, assisted by secretaries of departments, and answerable only to Parliament.

REVENUES AND CHARGES OF INDIA. 1859-60.

In our last issue we extracted from the Calcutta Phoenix a précis of the financial statement of the Indian Government for the current year, and also of its expectations with regard to the following year. The subject, however, is too important to be thus summarily dismissed, and we therefore now propose to lay before our statistical readers the exact debtor and creditor account submitted to the Secretary of State for India. It is now anticipated that the "deficit in India" for 1859-60 will be Rs. 265,14,311, which, with Rs. 384,85,500 for Home Charges, will make a total deficit of Rs. 649,99,811. This is an improvement on the Sketch Estimate for May to the extent of Rs. 82,60,689. But it is as well not to be too sanguine on this head. The anticipated result is owing partly to an "expected" reduction in the Military and Public Works Charges, but chiefly to the income "expected" to be derived from certain new taxes, of which the principal one has not yet passed into law. The Alnaschar system of making estimates, it will be seen, still prevails in the East. The augmentation of the Opium pass duty in the Bombay Presidency, and the increase in Customs duties throughout India, will contribute, in some degree, to the amelioration of the financial position of the Government; but greater results are to arise from the increase in Salt Duties, estimated at Rs. 26,00,000, from the new Stamp Act, valued at Rs. 500,000 in excess of former receipts, and, above all, from the "proposed" Income-tax, which is to yield Rs. 46,50,000 per annum. To sum up; from all these various sources the annual revenues will be improved to the extent of Rs. 77,50,000. Not one syllable, however, do we hear whispered as to the reduction of native troops and irregular levies:—

The estimate for the year 1860-61 is candidly admitted to be less "reliable." Unforeseen circumstances may produce unforeseen consequences; but if nothing occurs to alter the figures in the annexed statement—why, they will remain unaltered. The first saving to be effected is to the amount of Rs. 90,50,000, "in consequence chiefly of a reduction in the commissariat charges, in the strength of H.M.'s troops, in the payments on account of passage-money, and in mutiny charges owing to the discharge of the Naval Brigades, and to the breaking up of the Bombay and Kamptee moveable columns;" still, not a word as to the reduction of the native soldiery and trained bands. The new taxes are to exceed the receipts in the current year by Rs. 1,45,00,000; so that, finally, it is "assumed" that the Indian revenues in 1860-61 will amount to Rs. 38,90,25,000, and the expenditure at Rs. 38,02,50,000, giving a surplus of Rs. 87,75,000. This bright prospect, however, is slightly tarnished by taking into account the home charges, which convert smiling plenty into hideous want, and leave an ultimate deficit of Rs. 3,35,96,800.

We accept these estimates in the spirit of Hume's philosophic remark: "A propensity to hope and joy is real riches; one to fear and sorrow, real poverty;" and will only add, in the words of Ben Jonson,—

"Your hopes are like happy blossoms fair,
And promise timely fruit, if you will stay
But the maturing."

But "there's the rub." Besides, recollections of the past are apt to nip in the bud such pleasant fancies of the future; but, as a poet observes, whose name at this moment escapes us:—

"Where beams of warm Imagination play, Memory's soft 'figures' melt away."

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

This society resumed its meetings for the season on Saturday afternoon, November 19th, the president, Colonel Sykes, in the chair. There had been a large accumulation of presents during the recess, and among the numerous volumes was one containing Arabic newspapers, and a publication of the seven first books of Euclid, printed in Chinese.

Mr. De B. Priaulx read a paper on the Indian Embassy to Augustus, described by Nicolaus Damascenus, respecting the authenticity of which there has been much variety of opinion. The account given of the embassy by Damascenus, in a fragment preserved by Strabo, states that at Antioch Epidaphne he fell in with three Indian ambassadors then on their way to the Court of Augustus; that they were the survivors of a larger embassy, the length of the journey having proved fatal to the others. The letter they were the bearers of was written in Greek, in the name of Porus, and set forth that Porus, though the lord of 600 kings, much valued the friendship of Cæsar, and was ready to open his dominions to him and to assist him on all just and lawful occasions. The presents they brought with them were in the charge of eight slaves, naked all but their girdles, and consisted of a youth whose arms had been amputated at the shoulders in childhood, some large vipers, and a snake ten cubits long, a river tortoise of four cubits, and a partridge somewhat larger than a vulture. Several Roman historians confirm the statement of an Indian embassy to Augustus, but they differ as to the date, the character of the presents, and in the name of the king from whom it was sent; and it was the object of Mr. Priaulx to reconcile these differences, to account for the letter having been written in Greek, and to determine the character and object of the embassy. After examining the various authorities on the subject, and balancing the probabilities of their accounts, Mr. Priaulx attributed the origin of the embassy to the Greeks of Alexandria, which was at that period essentially a Greek city. The merchants there carried on a large and increasing traffic with India, being supplied with the commodities by the Arabs, who jealously maintained their monopoly, and endeavoured to keep the trade in their own hands.

voured to prevent the Greek merchants from trading directly with India. It was therefore important to the Alexandrian Greeks to open the communication which the Arabs kept closed, and one of the most feasible means of doing this, would be to procure an embassy from some Indian rajah for the purpose of representing to Augustus the advantages that would attend the opening of the direct trade with India. In addition to the commercial advantages to be gained from such a course, the Greeks of Alexandria had a political interest to serve. In the great civil war just ended they had been zealous partisans of Mark Antony, and it was of importance to them to conciliate the favour of the conqueror, which they could not do more effectually than by promoting an Indian embassy, and thus raise him in the estimation of the people to an equality with Alexander, the object of the Alexandrians being not to impose upon him, but to gain his favour by enabling him to impose on the Roman people. Mr. Priaulx, taking a review of these circumstances, thus explained and accounted for the embassy. He assumed that in the northern half of the Indian peninsula some Hindoo rajah, in his intercourse with Greek merchants, had often heard from them of the greatness and wealth of their metropolis, and of the advantages which he and his country would derive from more intimate commercial relations with it, and that they advised an embassy. The rajah having consented, the embassy arrived in Alexandria, for which city only it might have been originally intended. But the Alexandrians, alive to their own interests, quickly forwarded it to Augustus, and gave it weight and dignity by affixing to the Greek letter the name of Porus. Mr. Priaulx said that in offering this explanation, he did not pretend that it was quite satisfactory, but he considered it less improbable, less open to objection, and more in accordance with the statements given than others.

Colonel Sykes observed, in reference to one portion of Mr. Priaulx's statement, wherein the snake sent as one of the presents was represented to be an object of worship, that the boa-constrictor, which a snake of that size must evidently have been, is not worshipped in any part of India, and he conceived that such a present could only have been forwarded as an object of curiosity.

The meeting was then adjourned to the 3rd of December.

CALCUTTA AND SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY.

The report of the directors of this company states that—"Since the last ordinary general meeting, held on the 31st May last, the directors have continued their exertions to push on, as rapidly as possible, the various measures connected with the construction of the line. More than half of the materials of the permanent way have already left England, while the shipment of the remainder is rapidly advancing. A commencement has been made also in the shipment of the rolling stock, for which satisfactory contracts have been entered into with eminent firms. A further carefully selected staff, consisting of an assistant-engineer, storekeeper, and four inspectors of works, has lately proceeded overland to India, and will find their work ready for them on arrival. The general advices from the agent in India, extending to September 22, are most satisfactory. Arrangements for putting up the telegraph to be erected along the line are already commencing. The continued confidence in the enterprise entertained by those on the spot is shown by the readiness with which available shares are being taken up in Calcutta. As regards the local government, the land commissioner in Calcutta had received final orders to put the company's agent, as soon as practicable, in possession of the land for the Calcutta terminus, and, the periodical rains being over, the works were about to commence on all points of the line. Plans for three station-houses at Ghurra, Sonapore, and Basra, had been approved, and their construction was to be immediately commenced. These will serve as residences for the engineers while the line is under construction. The erection of an iron-bridge to carry the railway over Tolly's Canal, about eight miles from Calcutta, had been sanctioned, and advertisements have been issued by the directors for tenders for the necessary ironwork, &c. The first five miles out of Calcutta are entirely level, and present so few difficulties of construction that it is hoped that this portion will be available for transporting the material for the line within the next three months. Between Calcutta and the Port of Mutlah the construction of a bridge over the Piallee River is under the consideration of the agent and chief engineer in India, in communication with the board and their consulting engineer in London. On the thirteen miles between the Piallee and the Mutlah the earthworks are already in progress. The local authorities in India continue their favourable estimate and support of the line, and everything tends to strengthen the hope entertained by your directors and their officers in India, that it will be fully completed and fit for running in the course of March, 1861. Of the capital of £250,000, the amount paid upon shares up to the present time is £122,194. 14s., of which £69,115. 4s. is the amount received in anticipation of calls. The balance in the hands of the Secretary of State is £73,960. 17s. 8d., and the rapid progress of the line will require the payment of the remainder of the capital at an early period. The exact dates of future calls must in a great degree depend upon the extent to which proprietors may avail themselves, as they have already done to so great an extent, of the privilege of paying up their shares in full; but the whole of the remaining capital will probably be required by the middle of next year."

I can take riding or other exercise without feeling that extreme lassitude and weariness afterwards. My general health is much improved. You have my best thanks. You will secure my best support.—Yours truly, 'Toquay, July 30, 1859. "J. PRATT MATHEWSON."

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—NOVEMBER FOGS.

PURIFICATION OF THE AIR.—As the blood in its healthy state sustains and renovates every part of the living system, so when it is impoverished or impure (as it must of necessity be whilst November Fogs prevail, and the density of the atmosphere prevents the deleterious gases rising above our heads) it has a precisely contrary effect. It is manifest that no medicine which does not reach the circulation can exterminate disease. These wonderful Pills operate directly, powerfully, and beneficially on the blood venous and arterial; they remove all the nephetic vapours absorbed from the atmosphere; they relax the air-cells of the lungs, affording a larger supply of oxygen, and they expel disease and prolong existence.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Bombay Mail of the 11th of November has been delayed some days by the steamer being detained at Alexandria to bring on the Australian Mail at the same time. This is certainly bad management, for the two mail services should be worked quite independently of one another.

From the Western Presidency the chief news relates to the expedition against the Waghers, which appears to have been completely successful. After withstanding a severe cannonade of several days' duration, and after several ineffectual sorties, the enemy evacuated Dwarka early on the morning of the 1st of November. A flying column under Colonel Scobie was about to march in pursuit of the retreating garrison.

The Indian "Jenkins" has been disporting himself at Lucknow in quite unusual fashion. The grand doings in honour of the constellation of rank and fashion are minutely recorded, and a very fine tumasha it is said to have been. Our readers will, no doubt, be gratified to learn that the Viceroy's countenance was "all serene," and that Lady Canning wore "an air of great amiability, together with a beautiful white feather in her hat." Oh! Jeames, Jeames! canst thou not lay aside thy plush for a single day?

His Excellency's speech to the assembled talookdars was in excellent taste, and very much to the purpose, being both firm and conciliatory. It will be seen that the talookdaree system is re-established in the form in which it existed under the ex-King, and that all grants of land are in perpetuity. This is certainly in contradiction to his lordship's previous policy, but not for that is it the less wise and commendable.

Reports of the Nana's death were still busily circulated, but not generally credited.

In Central India the smouldering embers of the rebellion are about to be trampled out by seven moveable columns, under the directions of General Whitlock. From the south and south-west three columns were marching upon the rebels, commanded separately by Colonel Primrose, of the 43rd Light Infantry, Colonel Oakes, the 12th Royal Lancers, and Colonel Nott, 19th Madras Native Infantry. Colonel Ross, with his camel corps, was to attack them from the Saugor side, and Colonel Turner, of the 97th, was to advance from Banda. Capt. Wright, with 200 of the Sikhs and forty of the 43rd, was posted at Gereeh, while the Brigadier had removed to Poorania, a position between his head-quarters column and Alexander's Horse, which guarded the road from Ghysabad to Huttah.

Lord Elphinstone's Minute of Thanks to the Bombay Civil Service and military officers on civil employ for their conduct during the rebellion will be read with interest, though a feeble and rambling performance from a literary point of view. We would also refer to the despatch of the Secretary of State for India on the compensation question.

Sir John Bowring, we understand, is to receive a pension of £1,500 a-year. To this we have no objection, if the country thinks proper to estimate his past services at that rate; but we trust that India will not be treated as the milch cow to supply ex-notabilities from China. The Indian revenue is quite sufficiently burdened as it is with payments that ought to be provided for from other quarters.

BENGAL.

CALCUTTA CORRESPONDENCE.

CALCUTTA, November 2, 1859.

When I last wrote, about 1,000 discharged Europeans had embarked from this port, and had refused to re-enlist for China. The Tasmania is about to leave with 1,000 more, and nothing will induce the men to serve after the treatment they have received from Lord Canning. You may calculate in England that the whole of the old Company's European army is gone, and you may set about replacing it as soon as you like. Lord Canning, as you will have seen by the Bombay papers, has been at Lucknow with a magnificent army, buttering and rewarding natives; but no preparations have been made to send an expedition to China. We are here in a state of perfect wonder at the Ministry continuing in office a man so notoriously incapable, and who will yet bring some deep disgrace on the nation. We have heard, on very reliable authority, that the Nana is really dead, but we take little or no interest in it. He, at least, was an enemy who endeavoured to extirpate our race, who proclaimed that he would do it, and from him we had nothing to expect but annihilation. He was an open and declared enemy, and we fought and thrashed him. We have now a far more insidious enemy to deal with—one who, under the pretence of humanity and equal justice, has exerted himself constantly and vigorously to ruin our prestige, crush our fortunes, and degrade us to the lowest point of degradation. His progress through the country is with the purpose of honouring and rewarding those who supported the Government during the mutinies. Had you not some idea at home that the Europeans fought and conquered the mutineers? All a mistake. It was entirely the work of loyal natives.

The rules regarding compensation for losses sustained during the mutinies have been published, and have caused great disappointment and dissatisfaction here. It was supposed, from Sir Charles Wood's speech to Parliament, that suturers would get one-half of the value of houses, factories, crops, merchandise, &c.; but it turns out they are only to get one-third. They are to get one-half of two thousand rupees, and one-third on all sums beyond two thousand rupees. As claims of this kind are generally for large sums, say from twenty to one hundred thousand rupees, the mention of one-half is a mere mockery. I was reading the report of the Colonisation Committee, and found at the conclusion the following sentence:—

"Every Englishman should go to India with a deep sense of his responsibility, not only to those he is about to govern or among whom he is about to reside, but to his own country, whose character for firmness, justice, and forbearance he is bound constantly, zealously, and by personal example to maintain."

We shall be happy to follow the advice of the Parliamentary Committee, and hope that England will also support that character for justice which she arrogates to herself.

THE ENGLISH VICEROY IN LUCKNOW.

Lord Canning is holding high Court in Lucknow, and lording it over the princes and nobles of the province in a truly regal manner. On the 25th October he held a grand Durbar, and received with great ceremony and solemnity one hundred and eighty seven native chiefs. Many of them received khillats, and Rajah Maun Sing was raised to the dignity of Maharajah. This Maun Sing is not the betrayer of Tantia Toppe, but a wealthy zemindar who did us great service during the re-conquest of Oude. Lord Canning's address to the talookdars and assembled nobles was very impressive, and conveyed in lucid and forcible language the future policy of the British Government with regard to India.

The following is the speech his Lordship delivered on the occasion:—

"TALOOKDARS OF OUDE.—I am glad to find myself in your country, and amongst you, and to have this opportunity of speaking to you in the name of the Queen your Sovereign.

"A year has not passed away since this province was the seat of anarchy and war. The conduct of its people had been such that the Government was compelled to lay a heavy hand upon it. But peace and order are now restored to every corner of Oude, and I am come to speak to you, not of the past, but of the future.

"You have all of you who are here present received yesterday the grants of those estates which the Government has restored to you.

"You will have seen, by the terms of those grants, that the ancient Talookdaree system of Oude is revived and perpetuated.

"Be assured that, so long as each one of you is a loyal and faithful subject and a just master, his right and dignity as a talookdar will be upheld by me and by every representative of your queen, and that no man shall disturb them.

"You will also have seen by those grants that the same rights are secured on the same conditions to your heirs for ever.

"Let this security be an encouragement to you to spend your care, and time, and money upon the improvement of your possessions.

"As the Government has been generous to you, so do you be generous to those who hold under you, down to the humblest tribes of the soil. Aid them by advances of money and other indulgences to increase the productiveness of the land, and set them an example of order and obedience to your rulers.

"Let this same security in your possessions encourage you to bring up your sons in a manner befitting the position which they will hereafter occupy as the chiefs of Oude. Learn yourselves, and teach them to look to the Government as a father.

"Talookdars!—I trust that there are none amongst you who are so infatuated as to believe that the Government has had designs against your religion. Even if there be any such, I will not condescend to repeat the assurances which they have already received on this head. I leave it to time and experience, and their own senses, to dispel their perverse suspicions. But, for their own sakes, I warn them not to be led into acts of opposition or distrust towards the Government by the false tales of designing men.

"Lastly, talookdars, whenever in any matter you have doubts to be resolved or wishes to make known, address yourselves to the chief commissioner. He will tell you the truth in all things. He is the high and trusted representative of the Government in Oude; and, depend upon it, he will be your best adviser and your truest friend.

"I wish that I could speak to you in your own language. That which I have said will now be interpreted to you, and I enjoin you to bear it in your memories."

If the subordinates of Government only regulate their actions by the spirit embodied in this address, we shall soon have no occasion for the vast standing army which now impoverishes the land. Having demonstrated to India our strength and resources, we must endeavour to govern her, not with a rod of iron, but with the spirit of conciliation and persuasion. It is, therefore, to be hoped that care will be taken to have Lord Canning's address translated into all the native languages, and distributed throughout India: so that the people may know that justice and liberality are the chief elements of our political policy in the East.—Telegraph and Courier.

TRIUMPHAL ENTRY OF THE VICEROY INTO LUCKNOW.

From a very early hour on Saturday morning, Oct. 22, people commenced assembling at the Char Bagh, and by the appointed time, 5 A.M., all the civil and military officers (the latter in full uniform) as well as the other European residents of the place, were in eager readiness to meet the Viceroy. About six o'clock his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, accompanied by his staff, was met on the other side of the bridge by Sir Hope Grant, Mr. Wingfield, and several others, all of whom then rode back across the bridge, where the advent of Lord Canning was most anxiously awaited. A royal salute soon announced his lordship's approach, and almost immediately afterwards an open carriage and four, containing his Excellency and the Countess, made its appearance. His lordship was warmly greeted on all sides, and on all sides he most gracefully acknowledged the greetings. Here his lordship got out and bestrode his charger, Lady Campbell taking her place alongside of the Countess. The procession now formed thus:—

Advance Guard.—Squadron 2nd dragoon guards; troop 1st Punjab cavalry; troop royal horse artillery; wing her Majesty's 35th regiment.

Then followed the 1st Punjab irregular cavalry; 1st Sheikh regiment of infantry; Khelat-i-Ghilzie regiment; wing her Majesty's 35th regiment.

Then the officers of the Quartermaster-general's department.

Then a detachment of the body guard.

Then the Aides-de-Camp to the Commander-in-Chief; ditto to the Viceroy; Assistant Adjutant-general Queen's troops; ditto ditto of the army; Assistant and Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-generals of the army; Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief; ditto ditto to the Viceroy.

Then a body of chobdars, mace-bearers, and others carrying fans and umbrellas, and other insignia of royalty.

Then the—

With the Chief Commissioner on his left, and the Commander-in-Chief on his right, and a little to the rear Sir Hope Grant and Mr. Beadon.

Then the state carriage with

COUNTESS CANNING.

Followed by the Assistant Adjutant-General, and Assistant Quarter Master-General of Divisions, Aides-de-Camp to General Officers, Major of Brigade, and Civil and Military Officers of the Garrison.

Then followed, in stately array, some twelve or thirteen elephants, richly caparisoned—the one carrying the famous silver Howdah, and covered with cloth of gold and silver, being pre-eminently the most conspicuous of the lot.

Then followed—the Governor-general's body guard; 2nd dragoon guards; 1st Sikh cavalry; Her Majesty's 23rd regiment; battery royal artillery; battery Bengal artillery; Her Majesty's 73rd regiment.

And last of all, the 2nd battalion rifle brigade.

The troops belonging to the Lucknow Garrison were under the command of Brigadier Chute, and those belonging to the Viceroy's escort under Colonel Walter—Sir Hope Grant commanding the whole.

The arrangements for keeping the roads had been entrusted to the City Police, under Captain Rawlings, and they were well-kept.

The procession moved slowly along the new road leading to the Chouk, and on nearing the Muchee Bhowan, the fort guns fired a royal salute. It then turned off on the road to the right, leaving the south and south-west sides of the Muchee Bhowan fully exposed to the view. It then proceeded along the Strand, when a third salute from the Residency Fort was fired. Passing the Strand, the procession entered the quadrangle on the east of the Chutter Munzil, wherein were assembled all that remained of the effete royalty and nobility of Oude, who, after dismounting and making obeisance, joined the procession to his Lordship's encampment at the Martiniere, where it reached close upon nine o'clock, and finally a fourth salute was fired. The band played both fore and aft, alternately, throughout the viceregal progress.

Lord Canning wore white pants, blue frock coat, with the red sash across his shoulders, and a helmet with a white puggree, and looked remarkably serene. The Countess was very plainly attired in amber coloured silk, and a straw hat with a beautiful white feather. Her ladyship looked the picture of amiability. Neither the earl nor the countess spoke much during their progress, but Lord Clyde was not quite so grave. Major Hutchinson, military secretary to the chief commissioner, acted as cicerone to her ladyship.—Oude Gazette.

THE LEVEE.

On Monday, October 24, at noon, the Right Honourable the Governor-general received the civil and military officers at Lucknow, in the great durbar tent. The camp is occupying a position in the park, between Dalziel House and the Martiniere, where the two roads diverge towards cantonments and that place. Files of police lined the approaches, and preserved order, by preventing stoppage or obstruction on the line of road north of the durbar tent. The arrangement, though well intended, was productive of some inconvenience to those who, leaving their conveyances on the road, and starting towards the durbar tent, found on returning that all carriages had been driven round to the opposite side under orders from the police. The durbar tent occupied a position facing the south, with the back of its long line of canvas on the north. It held the centre of the park between the two roads, and had an open place for approach from that nearest the cantonment. Of all camps in India that of the Governor-general is distinguished for its expanse of canvas, superior to the ordinary quality used for these portable mansions of an armed host. Each tent, such as that we entered, would afford accommodation for 100 fighting men. Its wide opening, its gay colours, length and breadth are well adapted for the reception of a large number of guests. Its poles, between which forty feet of suspended punkahs move the sullen and confined atmosphere, are at once useful and unique. Its light screens, which afford privacy to the adjoining house of canvas, are equally striking and interesting. Its connats, those walls of oriental invention, give to the place an air of authority and of lordly power. The sentinels, mute as statues, in erect posture at the entrance, indicate the speciality of the ceremony. Groups of officials dressed, some in simple and unassuming Khakee, others in gold-laced vestments and flashing plume, are earnestly discussing the topics of the day as we enter this centre of a great gathering. We are one of that small knot who have trusted to the speed of our horses, and find the greater part of the guests assembled. Before us, standing near one of the poles of this mansion of the desert, is Lord Canning, our worthy Governor-general of India. We must now venture upon some account of the levee. On either side of his lordship stood the men of the sword and of the senate, Lord Clyde, supported by the chiefs of the various departments. Mr. Beadon and Mr. Wingfield each in turn presented officers whose services have entitled them to consideration and due honour. The native officers marched up or advanced in file to the Viceroy's presence. The sword unsheathed was held in both hands across the body. The Governor-general, making a graceful bow, advanced and honoured each native officer by placing his right hand on the scabbard. Immediately these native officers had passed before his lordship some casual presentations of officers, distinguished for special services, or holding responsible positions, took place, and our Governor-general, entering the crowd which surrounded him, in the most affable address introduced himself without ceremony to those he recognised, talked on as if discussing the merits and the chances of either party at a match of cricket, and, without occasioning the slightest stir or movement in the crowd, left the tent by one of the passages which led to his private quarters in the great camp. The meeting almost immediately broke up, and in a few minutes the durbar tent was empty. We noticed in the crowd many officers of the gallant 35th, whose services have been acknowledged by their being placed on his lordship's escort. The few officers among so many above forty struck us as remarkable. The fire of youth was depicted in almost every countenance, few indeed excepted in the groups who occupied the several divisions of that royal tent. Age, wisdom, and experience, seemed to cluster in a small knot near Lord Canning.

At four P.M. a durbar was held for the reception of several members of the royal family. The usual ceremonies were adopted, and the descendants of the kings of Oude exchanged silver and gold for tinsel. A durbar chaplet of tinsel was presented to men who had claims to the musnud of Oude, and one of the royal family whom we accosted said to us, in a spirit of agreeable retort,—"You see I have lost the game and lost my stakes, the result is against me." The durbar tent, as is usual on such occasions, presented to the eye a scene of oriental magnificence—the whole area was covered with Turkish carpets of varied hues. Under three state chairs a cloth of gold, singular in beauty and extraordinary in its magnificence, occupied a place at the head of the tent, reflecting in the receding light a contrast at once grand and imposing. In rear of these seats of honour stood the Men of the Mace and the Silver Stick, true personifications of the oriental character of the reception. The members of the royal family first appeared, and were conducted to their seats according to precedence—Shahzadahs in the first order, then the collateral branches of the royal family; the whole exceeding our anticipations of the actual number having claims to a royal lineage. Civil and military officers filled up the seats on the left, and presented in their grouping many men of whose services we may justly feel proud. Lord Canning, immediately after the guard of honour had taken up its position at the entrance, was ushered in, the company rising, and the national anthem greeting him in strains of right royal welcome. His lordship proceeded to the chair in the centre, Lord Clyde at the same time placing himself in that on the left, and Mr. Beadon in the one on the right. Mr. Wingfield, our chief commissioner, placed himself near the Commander-in-Chief. A royal salute, meantime, thundered forth its loud welcome, and afforded time for the chief master of the ceremonies to prepare himself for the circumstances of the occasion. Mr. Beadon, with much ease and dignity, opened the ceremonies by presenting a youth of tender years and interesting aspect, Mirza Kumur Kuddhur, whose dignified demeanour filled the spectators with feelings alike of delight and wonder. Nursed in a royal cradle, inhaling the breath of power, and by instinct inheriting those noble qualities which indicate high birth, the little prince, in the very poetry of graceful obeisance, bid the lord of this empire most welcome. His lordship, affected and interested by the novelty of the spectacle, grasped his little hand with an earnestness approaching to parental fondness. The blood flushed in that noble cheek as he gazed upon this interesting member of the royal family. Now came Moostapha Ali Khan, the ex-King's brother, one who had enjoyed and had lost all the luxuries of a royal abode in Lucknow. Few men have suffered more than Moostapha Ali Khan, and few have borne misfortune with a better grace. He was throughout with the garrison in the siege, having been suspected ere the cloud of the rebellion burst over Oude. Next Dara Selwut Mirza and Mahomed Ali, also brothers of the ex-King. Sooluwan Kudar is the same person chosen by the cavalry when the two branches of the rebel army desired each to set up a ruler. In order of precedence, followed Koorum Bukht Ali Azeemooshan, Mirza Mahomed Tukkee and Ruffeemooshan, uncles to the ex-King. The foregoing are included in the first class. Mr. Simpson, one of the secretaries, now proceeded to take part in the ceremony, and brought forward Mozumooddowlah, son-in-law to Mahomed Ali Shah, Uzmutooddowlah son-in-law to Wajid Ali Shah, Surfrazooddowlah Imtazooddowlah Moozowdowlah, Nizamooddowlah Inktaarooddowlah Ghazufarooddowlah, Jurazooddowlah, brothers-in-law of the ex-King; then Hushmtoodwiah, nephew to Mahomed Ali Khan, and Mahomed Tukkee. With these severally his lordship shook hands. Then, presented by Mr. Forsyth, Secretary to Chief Commissioner, followed Moomtazoodwiah, son of Nuseeoodwiah, Mirza Bukht Bedar, son of Korun Ali, son of Azeemoosh Shah, Nawab Mirza and Bahador Mirza, son of Hoomson Bukht; then Saieed-oo-dowla Mahomed Zuki Ali Khan, son of Moomtaz-oo-dowlah, Ameer-oo-dowla Ali Hoosein and Shums-ood-dowla, son of Rookmut-oo-dowla, Iktear-oo-dowla. Kazim Ali Khan, Ahmed Hossein Khan and Kulub Hoosein Khan, sons of Nawab Inavut Ali Khan Nawab Auftaub Ali Khan, and Mahomed Mookkeem Khan, son of Nawab Mirza; then Sharik-oo-dowla Ukber Ali Khan, uncle of Moshumoo dowla, and Mahomed Ubbas, son-in-law of Rookum-oo-dowla. The Mirza Ali Khan, son of Mosnum-oo-dowla, Sooliman Mirza, son of Guzzuffer-oo-dowla, Zuka-oo-dowla, son of Iktear-oo-dowla, Seanud-oo-dowla and Abdool Mussun Khan, sons of Jaraz-oo-dowla, and, finally, Musjeed-oo-dowla Khan, son of Husmut-oo-dowla Khan.

His lordship having inquired if all the members of the royal family had been presented, now proceeded to address them. He did so in a speech at once dignified and simple. He assured them of the protection of her most gracious Majesty, and enjoined them to be good and faithful subjects in return for the advantages secured to them. He further urged them to aid by every possible means in the maintenance of order and obedience, and desired that individually they should, on all occasions and under all circumstances, show a kindly feeling to the poor. Mr. Beadon, in a most effective speech, explained the above to the assembled nobles, and the Governor-general then proceeded to place the chaplet of tinsel on the neck of each of the royal visitors. Mosumooddowlah, Mustapha Khan, and several others, returned their grateful thanks, and assured his lordship that they were right loyal and well disposed towards the British Government.

No. 98.—Camp La Martiniere, Lucknow, Monday, October 24, 1859.

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-general held a durbar this day for the reception of the members of the Royal family of Oude.

After giving a private audience to each of the three principal members of the family, namely, Nawab Mirza Kumr Kudr, Nawab Mustafa Ali Khan, and Nawab Mohsunood-dowlah, his Excellency received the whole in open durbar, at which his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and the principal civil and military officers of the staff and of the garrison of Lucknow were present.

On the Viceroy taking his seat a royal salute was fired.

The members of the Royal family were the introduced, one by one, to his Excellency, and on returning to their seats his Excellency addressed them in the following words:—

"I am glad to have this occasion of receiving with the respect due to their rank and position the members of the Royal family of Oude, and of assuring them of the desire of the Government to extend to them its protection and consideration from this time forth.

"In return for that protection I look to their setting before the people of the city of Lucknow an example of order, loyalty, and obedience in all things to the authority of the Queen."

This having been interpreted by the Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department, the usual complimentary gifts were distributed, and the assembly was dismissed.—Lucknow Herald.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PLAYING WITH FIRE-ARMS.—Mr. Rouse, an assistant to Messrs. Stuart and Co., coach-builders, it is alleged accidentally killed his wife. The following particulars of this sad occurrence have been furnished to us.—Early yesterday morning, October 21, as Mrs. Rouse got out of bed and was entering the bath-room, Mr. Rouse, who had a gun in his hand at the time, believing it to be unloaded, jokingly said to her, "This is the way we used to shoot in the jungles," he aimed the gun at her, and pulling the trigger, she instantly fell down dead. The gun was a loaded one, it had been loaded, it is said, six months ago, and was two or three days before given to a bearer to be cleaned, who left the contents untouched, and just oiled the barrel. The ball penetrated Mrs. Rouse's cheek and passed through her head. Mr. and Mrs. Rouse had been very recently married. Mrs. Rouse was one of the daughters of an old resident at Calcutta, the late Mr. Weaver, the undertaker. The coroner with a jury examined the body last evening. Inquest will be held this morning.—Englishman, Oct. 22.

EMAM MEHNDEE.—The following collateral circumstances, connected with the trial and execution of Hubeeb Shah, faqueer, who was hanged at Lahore for treason, may prove interesting. Gholam Nubbee Shah, the Tehseeldar of Zoffewal, near Sealkote, reported that on the 5th July Hubeeb Shah presented to him, the Tehseeldar, a paper, telling him to read it quietly and act upon it. This paper was full of redundancies, but the following was the pith of the document:—"In the name of God! The merciful God is Lord, Mahomet is his prophet. God's name is true; Emam Mehndee is the true king! He is on the throne, indeed, he sits on the cushion of State!! Ye Mussulmen, read the Koraan, for the sake of God help the cause of Emam Mehndee. May his feast long be celebrated; may his durbar continue. Ye Hindoos, adhere to your own faith; attend to its precepts, keep up your good name. Ye Mussulmen stand by your own faith. The cost of Emam Mehndee's state will be 70,000 rupees a-day; its income shall be many lakhs a month. 1,000 rupees shall be given to a Hindoo and Mahomedan. The faqueers shall be sumptuously treated, especially the Hindoos. May the assembly of Emam Mehndee last for ever. All hail, the fourteen elements of the sky and earth! Emam Mehndee has the command of them all. He has received a turban for his head from God himself. Let musical instruments be sounded. Let a standard for the Prophet be made, and a drum for the Hindoo goddess, and a flag for her also. Let large quantities of rice, oil, and sweetmeats be collected daily for the faqueers. The city is the Lord's; the power belongs to Emam Mehndee, the king. The city of Amritsur belongs to the Emam. The Tehseeldar shall receive 200 rupees salary, and largess besides from Emam Mehndee; and horsemen shall receive rupees 25 each, a foot soldier 9 rupees, and a Rissaldar 200 rupees; whoever shall fight on the side of Emam Mehndee, his children shall receive 25 rupees reward, and whoever shall show the head of an infidel to the Emam's officers shall receive a reward of rupees 25. Let the Hindoo call on Rama, and the Mussulmen on Allah. Under the Emam's rule he who received 20 shall receive 30; he who received 30 shall receive 40; he who received 50 shall have 65; he who had 80 shall have 100 rupees. Collect money from the country, and bring into the Emam's camp. Let all be ready in the fair of Narowal." [Narowal is in the Amritsur district. The fair held there is known as the fair of Emam Mehndee.] On hearing the above paper the Tehseeldar caused the faqueer to be immediately arrested and searched. Some twenty-three papers, similar to the above, four pictures, and five small green flags were found upon him. These papers were addressed to different Tehseeldars, and the one above quoted appears to have been one of them, if not the first delivered. It is to be observed that they appeal to Mahomedans and Hindoos alike, but not to Sikhs. There is abundant mention of the Mahomedan prophet and the Hindoo goddess, but not of the Sikh Gooroo, nor is a word said of any of those emblems or symbols, which would assuredly have been introduced had the Sikhs been in the writer's thoughts. Of the pictures one was of the Hindoo goddess, one of Solomon, and two of Mahomedan saints, all crude and rough. The small green flags are common Mahomedan baubles. From the above it is deduced that these papers were the work of some common person on the spot; that they came from neither east of Hindostan nor from the west beyond the Indus, and that the character of the attempt was local and not general. From the evidence collected, it appears that, about a year ago, Hubeeb Shah came to Nonar, in the Sealkote district, and put up at the "tukera" or stand of one Morad Allee. He was fantastically dressed, and would stand and call upon God, and proclaim the coming reign of Emam Mehndee. The head men and others of the village, thinking the man dangerous, gave him alms and dismissed him from their village, but did not report the circumstance; they are Hindoos, partly Jat and partly Rajput, not Sikhs. It also appears that Hubeeb Shah's proclamations were confined to the Sealkote; that he was a native of Jummo of low caste. He was for some time servant to a dancing girl, which is sufficient to prove his low origin. In fact, the whole evidence proves how simply affairs of this nature are got up. A man from the dregs of the population, assuming the garb of religion, a disguise so flimsy as to deceive only the rustic or the vulgar, going about for twelve months through one of the most prosperous and contented districts of the Punjab, preaching sedition and extorting alms, never hindered or informed against by the people, and only arrested when he at last proceeded to a palpably overt act, thus proving how much the impostor is favoured by the people, if not from disaffection, at all events from indifference, and unwillingness to come forward. Yet impostors of this class may produce evil effects on the dispositions of abler and more influential persons, and if the efforts continue unchecked, or are permitted to multiply, a sap will be laid in the foundation of our power, which may not be so easily got rid of as was the case of Hubeeb Shah.—Delhi Gazette.

A COMEDY OF ERRORS.—The Englishman understands that the forty-one men who volunteered to join the China expedition, and returned from the Almwick Castle, did not accept the terms offered them after all. It is said their demands were absurd, and the authorities were obliged to send them back to their ship to continue their voyage to England with the rest of the discharged men. The forty-one were sent back in the Sir Henry Lawrence steamer.

TESTIMONIAL TO E. PURSER, ESQ., C.E.—A sum of money, exceeding Rs. 5,000, has been subscribed by the engineers, North-West Provinces East India Railway, for the purpose of purchasing a testimonial, of personal and high professional esteem, for the late chief engineer, Edward Purser, Esq. The exact form in which the testimonial is to be presented has not yet been fully decided on.

CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.—An examination of deputy magistrates and deputy collectors took place in the Alipore Court on the 13th October, Messrs. Wauchope, Cockerel, and Young forming the board of examiners. The candidates hold probationary appointments in the Mofussil, at Kishnagur, Hooghly, Burdwan, Raneeungee, and Bancoorah, &c. The Lieutenant-governor's circular is to the purport that the failure of any candidates to pass the examination will cause their dismissal, unless great cause for retention exists. Besides the examination in the languages, English and Bengali, searching questions were set from the revenue, civil, and criminal law. Most of the candidates acquitted themselves satisfactorily.

CAPTURE OF MEHRAB KHAN.—Major Meade has succeeded in effecting the capture of the notorious rebel, Mehrab Khan, the leader of the Kotah troops in their mutiny and attack upon Major Burton in the Kotah Agency; and also of the ruffian, a Velaitee, who had the chief hand in the murder of that officer and his sons. The former was captured at Dholpore on the 12th Oct., the latter at Sheopore some days previously. Several of the contingent mutineers, and murderers of officers and others at the Morar (Gwalior) mutiny of the 14th June, 1857, have also been apprehended, and are awaiting their trial.

SMALL CAUSE COURT, Oct. 17, 1859.—Mr. G. A. Macpherson took his seat for the first time as Chief Judge of this court this morning. Before, however, the business of the day was commenced, he was addressed by the pleaders of that court, through one of their body, Mr. Page, as follows:—"Sir,—The pleaders of the Small Cause Court have much pleasure in welcoming yourself as successor to Mr. Wylie. In losing the valued services of that gentleman we are indeed happy to have in his place a gentleman who for some fifteen months previously officiated during his absence, and one who upheld the position with so much ability. It has at all times been our endeavour, and we hope not unsuccessfully, to give satisfaction to the late respected judge, and we shall ever continue the same line of conduct towards yourself. I have the honour, in the name of the pleaders of this court, to welcome you on your appointment to the seat of first judge." Mr. Macpherson in reply said:—"Gentlemen,—I am extremely obliged to you for this kind and unexpected manifestation, and feel proud that my former efforts for the administration of justice should have induced you to receive me thus cordially. When I had the honour of officiating for Mr. Wylie, yourselves and I were always on good terms, and I sincerely trust that such may continue."

AN AWKWARD AFFAIR.—We regret to learn from Banda that two native cartmen were deliberately shot dead by a small party of H.M.'s 97th regiment, consisting of a sergeant and three privates travelling to join their regiment from Futteypore. The tragedy occurred about twelve miles from Banda. The soldiers say they were attacked, and fired in self-defence. The whole circumstance is covered with much mystery, and will only be cleared up by a general court martial. The story of the attack is generally discredited, and it is thought the sergeant's party must have been acting under a delusion, or that the unfortunate occurrence must be the result of some sudden quarrel. European soldiers ought not to be allowed to wander about the country without a commissioned officer to look after them. They do not understand a word of the language, and a thousand mistakes can occur which may end as fatally as in the present instance.

MEERUT, Oct. 22.—A few minutes after 5 A.M. this morning, Meerut was visited by an earthquake of a very violent nature. A friend writes: "The doors and windows of my room trembled noisily, as if shaken by some one outside, which I fancied to be the case, as my dogs lying near me immediately commenced barking; but at that instant my cot upheaved as if lifted by a person underneath, which caused me to jump out to ascertain the fact, but on gaining my feet I nearly lost my balance, as if from being violently shaken, and then, for the first time, the idea struck me that all these emotions had been caused by an earthquake. After a very short interval the shocks were repeated, and altogether they lasted from first to last fully sixty seconds, according to my sensations, though the time may actually have been less. A watch and several articles hanging against the wall oscillated considerably, and continued doing so after the quaking which set them in motion had ceased."

URJOON SING, EX-RAJAH OF PORAHAT in the district of Chota Nagpore, has been acquitted of the charges brought against him of having aided in the late disturbances, and of harbouring certain mutinous sepoys. He is now to be kept under surveillance. The proceedings of the trial have been submitted for the approval and confirmation of the Lieutenant Governor. The ex-Rajah has petitioned the Government for the restitution of his properties confiscated by Government.

A RUMOUR.—It has been very currently reported in Lucknow that Oude is to form an integral portion of the Central Provinces, of which Mr. Reade is to be the Lieutenant Governor, with head quarters at Allahabad. It is needless to hope against hope, for, we believe, it is almost certain that such is to be. The rumour coupled with this is that Mr. Edmonstone is to continue as Lieutenant Governor of the North-Western Provinces, with head-quarters at Agra. The Government of the Central Provinces will comprise Oude, Goruckpore, and Saugor, and, very possibly, the Nerbudda territory also. This will very considerably circumscribe the geographical limits of the Government of the North-Western Provinces.

KING OF OUDE.—The Governor-general has placed three lakhs of rupees at the disposal of Major Herbert, for the purchase of an estate for the King of Oude.

LANDOUR, October 22.—We had a rather severe shock of an earthquake here this morning about day-break, preceded by a low rumbling sound like distant thunder, from the East. The shock lasted upwards of twenty seconds in a series of short, rapid undulations, which made my bed shake under me, and set the doors and windows rattling. The night and day before had been perfectly serene and clear, with a north-west wind. In fact the weather for some time has been particularly fine and clear, but rather warmer than usual at this time in October, thermometer ranging from 50° in the morning to 68° in the afternoon. The hills are now nearly denuded of visitors, and of the few remaining some are going down almost every day. It is expected there will not be a single resident remaining at Landour during the winter, which the paharees prognosticate to be a very severe one.

FIELD MARSHAL LORD CANNING.—Yesterday morning at sunrise the troops in camp and cantonments paraded in review order for the inspection of his Excellency the Right Hon. the Governor-general. The parade ground was selected on the Maidan, north side of the Goomtee. The whole, drawn up in line facing the south, received the Governor-general about 6 A.M., his Excellency having the supreme command on this occasion, assisted by Sir Hope Grant. The following regiments appeared on parade:—1st troop 1st brigade horse artillery; ditto Bengal ditto; 2nd dragoon guards; 4th European light cavalry; 2nd battalion rifle brigade; 23rd royal Welch fusiliers; 35th regiment; 73rd highlanders; 1st regiment Sikh infantry; ditto Punjab cavalry; the Khilat-i-Ghizie regiment; the Governor-general's body guard; a regiment of native lancers. The Governor-general was received with a general salute, the bands playing the national anthem. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief then gave the order to march past in parade order, and several evolutions were afterwards executed with a precision and regularity which reflected much credit upon officers commanding regiments present on this occasion. The Governor-general and his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief left Lucknow this morning for Cawnpore.—Lucknow Herald, Oct. 20.

ROORKEE, October 22.—The movements downwards from Mussorie within the last few days have enlivened us greatly, and I suppose so many dak carriages were never known to pass backwards and forwards as at the present time. The tradesmen also in passing through are giving us the benefit of their auctions, which add to the animation. We are as usual hammering away at the workshops, and turning out articles as good as any Brummagem manufacture. The great canal of Cutley renoun is now dry, to allow of the repairs which are found necessary to the embankments, &c., which I hear are rather extensive; and the central office commences its usual tour, I believe, on the 1st November. The next session of the Thomason College commences on the first of next month, with, I am led to understand, a "full house," and there is a rumour that a number of civil engineers from England are to form an addition to the students. This morning, about a quarter past 5 o'clock, we had a visitation of earthquake; the shock was severe, but rather peculiar; the shaking lasted about thirty seconds, and if I may draw a comparison, it resembled the regularity of a coach going over rough ground. The hum that generally follows was not on this occasion observable. I walked into the garden immediately the shock was over, and such a brilliant sky I believe I never witnessed before, the atmosphere at the same time being extremely pure and bracing.

CENTRAL INDIA.—A large force is to be employed, under Brigadier Wheeler, in scouring Central India of the rebels who overrun that part of the country.

COLONEL WALTER, C.B.—The Governor-general has appointed Lieut.-col. Walter, C.B., commanding H.M.'s 35th regiment, to the command of his escort.

"DAINTY DAVIE."—The proprietors of the the Auckland Hotel having had a difference, the concern is to be registered under the Limited Liability Act; capital fourteen lakhs, shares Rs. 500 each, and "D. Wilson and Co." is thus to be sold. The huge house belongs to David himself, who is to let it at 2,000 a month.

THE NANA.—We have received further statements corroborating the reports of the Nana's death, which we mention, although we are inclined to think, as our Allahabad correspondent says, the rumour is given out with the intention of misleading Government. However, our informant says that he is certainly dead, and that his decease took place on a Saturday, some four weeks ago, at a place called Thara Goolheepore, in the Deoghur district, and that his followers were much confused, and at a loss how to act in consequence. General Dabee Dean, of the Nusseerabad brigade, who is a tall, powerful, and well made man, and a very good specimen of a Pandy, and was formerly a "subadar in the grenadier company of the 15th N.I., is still to the fore, and has two hundred men with him (a small command for a general officer), at a place called Toolbawasee.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 22.

SIMLA, October 24.—On the morning of the 22nd, at 5 o'clock precisely, just as the dawn was breaking, we were startled out of our sleep by a very severe shock of an earthquake. The vibrations were from east to west, and lasted for a full minute and a-half. Those who retained their presence of mind declare they felt eight distinct shocks; for my part I noticed but three, though the vibration continued between the shocks, so that the earth trembled the whole time. This is the first earthquake we have experienced in Simla this year, and it is declared to be the severest ever known to have occurred here. No damage, however, was done, though if it had shaken down some of the crazy tenements in the Bazaar, which always seem on the point of toppling down on the heads of the unwary passers by, it might have been a public benefit, and saved the Municipal Commissioners the onerous task of condemning, and insisting on their destruction. The 1st fusiliers from Dugshaie, and the 93rd highlanders from Subathoo, have orders to proceed to Umballah, and it is said that all regiments passing through that station have been desired to halt there—signs, it is supposed, of an approaching Chobham.

SAUGOR DISTRICT, BUNDELKUND, October 13.—Seven columns are preparing to move against the rebels immediately. Some have already started from Saugor, and others are in course of preparation to start immediately. The several officers to be in command of these columns are, as far as I can learn—Lieut.-Colonel Primrose, H. M.'s 43rd Foot; Lieut.-Col. Oakes, H. M.'s 12th R.L.; Lieut.-Col. Ross, Commanding Camel Corps; Lieut.-Col. Nott, 10th Madras Native Infantry, and Brigadier Wheeler, who also commands a column. The names of the others in command I have not yet learnt. I believe a column starts from Banda, and two from Gwalior for Bundelcund. Each force is to be about 1,000 strong, including cavalry and infantry, but I believe only one of the columns takes guns with it. The troops composing these columns will be principally taken from the Punjab and irregular cavalry corps recently arrived in the division. But the 43rd foot are to be out, and some of the Royal Artillery at Saugor. These columns are to clear Bundelcund of rebels as fast as they can, and some sanguine people imagine that the work will be accomplished by the end of November this year. However, if the rebels retreat into the recesses of the jungles, and run on all occasions, why, I fear that the process of ousting them will be a long and tedious one. The Madras troops in the division are to be relieved after the country is thoroughly cleansed of these vermin. Everything, that is all the details of and plan of operation, has been left to General Sir G. C. Whitlock, K.C.B., who will, I have no doubt, with his usual success effectually tranquillize the whole province, for which nothing less than the G.C.B. ought to be awarded him. It is a matter of speculation whether Government, with their proverbial generosity, will grant the troops engaged in these operations another six months' batta, which, in my opinion, ought to be given after the operations. The cold weather has set in, and ought to be made the most of by the officers in command of the columns out. The Allyghur Levy and Camel corps have arrived at Saugor, and the 17th Punjab Infantry are shortly expected. The authorities ought to work the Punna, Chirkaree, Allipore, Chutterpoor, and other independent States in Bundelcund, by making them each furnish their quota of troops towards restoring tranquillity; at least they should be made to keep the rebels, when they fly from our territory, from entering their own.—Delhi Gazette.

DELHI, Oct. 26.—It would please your readers to know that the conversion of Hindoo youths to Christianity is in rapid progress at this station. A reverend gentleman belonging to the Baptist mission exerts his best endeavours to monopolize the hearts of the heathen with his religion, and has hitherto busied himself in preaching the doctrines of the New Testament. One can scarcely fail to see him while passing by the Chandny Chouk standing on an eminence with a crowd of people, both asking and answering their questions on religious subjects—his look venerable, his pronunciation clear, and his diction elegant.

MUSSOORIE, October 23.—The arrangements for the depot for 1860 at present stand thus:—Lieutenant-colonel Crawford, her Majesty's 98th, to be commandant; Lieutenant Murray's (at present station staff) successor has not been named, but he ought to be, according to dustom, an officer of her Majesty's Indian service. The severe earthquake which was felt here at day-break yesterday was preceded and followed by loud rumbling noises. During the time it lasted it was really very alarming; we are anxious to know if it was felt down country. The hill men say we shall have a more severe one before long. The installation of the Teree Rajah (which is to come off on the 25th) is all the talk. The entire hill population are discontented to a man. Major Ramsay has failed in persuading the influential zemindars to accompany him, to be present at the ceremony; numbers having declared their intention of leaving the district, and settling in the Dhoon. The lawful heir continues here, sympathised with by all, notwithstanding his having been ordered by Major Ramsay to quit the district for ever. It is to be hoped the Governor-general, when made acquainted with the facts of the case, will order an impartial investigation to be made of the entire business.—Delhi Gazette.

SEALCOTE, Oct. 20.—What has given rise to the reports at home that the Punjab is in a disturbed state? There is not a quieter country in the world. No more sedition than you have in Leadenhall-street. The faqueer who was hanged at Lahore probably gave rise to the report. He was, in reality, however, nothing short of a maniac, and it was an infamous shame to string him up instead of putting him in a madhouse. It was done as an example to others, and yet they could not discover that a single individual was in any way connected with, or influenced by, his ravings.—Private Letter.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DIVING BELL.—The diving bell for the port of Madras has arrived, and the necessary arrangements for bringing it into operation are to be carried on under European superintendence. The arrival is most opportune, and we trust that before long the apparatus will be turned to good account, as there are several vessels which have lost their anchors in the roadstead, and cannot recover them, for at present divers are not to be obtained for love or money.

THE "COLBERT."—We regret to say that the French ship Colbert, while being piloted out this morning, by some accident got on shore on the bank stretching towards Candle Island. The master attendant was called at four this morning, and as soon as he went on board, arrangements were made to get the ship out with the next high tide, as it was too late for anything to be attempted when he boarded her. As we write, a chain and anchor are being laid out, and every other preparation made. The vessel is in no danger, and lying in eleven feet water.—Cochin Courier, October 15.

HINGOLEE, Nov. 1.—The 32nd regiment arrived here yesterday. Camp wonderfully healthy. The whole of the Hingolee force, cavalry, guns, and infantry went off on a dour early this morning. The usual story!—Rohillas and other scamps plundering. The place at present threatened is Chintoor, about forty miles distant. It is supposed to be the same band that plundered Joulah a week or two ago, only with increased numbers.

CIVIL CHANGES.—Sir Charles Trevelyan, during his recent tour through the northern division, appears to have resolved to amalgamate the small collectorates of Masulipatam and Guntoor into one district; and as the head-quarters of the Engineer's Staff in charge of the Kistnah Annicut and its subsidiary works are at Bezwarah, and as the chief source of increasing revenue is due to the irrigated lands now extending in all directions from the Annicut, his Excellency has wisely determined to make the central station of Bezwarah, to which all the roads and channels of the district converge, also the head-quarters of the collector; and to send off to a new district, about to be formed in Canara, those civilians not required for the Kistnah district. By this arrangement the absurd and expensive system of sending treasure from all parts of the district to an out of the way station on the seacoast will be prevented, and the entire duties of the Guntoor and Masulipatam districts will in future be conducted by a single staff of civilians, with no small saving to the State. The designation of the Rajahmundry district is also to be changed, and it will be known in future as the Godavery district.—Athenaeum.

WYNAAD.—Our advices from Wynaad state that it has been raining in torrents for several days. Bridges had been carried away and traffic much impeded. A woman was drowned at Vithery on the 2nd October in an attempt to cross a rickety bridge. We are deeply concerned to learn that labour is very scarce, many estates being totally neglected for want of hands. One planter writes he has only twelve men to pick his crops, while another with seventy tons of coffee has only twenty men, although at this time last year he had a hundred and fifty. A meeting of the Planters' Association was to have been held on the 11th October to petition against the Licensing Act, and also to take into consideration the labour question; and we hope some effectual arrangement will be made to remedy an evil which threatens the most serious loss and inconvenience to the planters.

BOMBAY.

THE AHMEDNUGGER DISTURBANCE.

The inhabitants of Ahmednuggur lately petitioned the magistrate, Mr. Fraser Tytler, to debar the native Christians from all access to the public wells. The following was the magistrate's decision, in reply to this petition :—

"The main statement in this petition is untrue. Vishnoo Punt's wife is not a Mhar or woman of low caste. Vishnoo Punt is a Brahmin, converted to Christianity. His wife is a Coombe, also converted. Before conversion he and his wife had full right to draw water from the tank in question. He has not forfeited the above right, or any other, by his conversion to Christianity. On the contrary, the law ensures him every right which he possessed before his conversion to Christianity. This law will be enforced, and those acting contrary thereto punished. In Bombay, and in many other places, 'all classes of the community, Christian converts, Hindoos, and Mahomedans, have free access to all the public tanks and wells.' Petitioners seek to debar Vishnoo Punt and his family from the use of the public tanks solely because he is a Christian. But it is well known that if a Mang or Mhar woman marries a Mussulman, she is allowed to use the tanks in right of her having become a Mahomedan. Cattle, horses, donkeys, prostitutes, &c., have all access to the public tanks; and yet this common and obvious right petitioners seek to deny to a man whose high respectability they themselves dare not and cannot gainsay."

This decision had the sanction of Government. The promulgation of it produced no little excitement in Ahmednuggur, and the shops throughout the city were closed from Sunday the 16th October to Thursday the 20th inclusive. It must not be supposed that this was the voluntary act of all the shopkeepers. Persons of influence went round and charged them that as they would avoid a great curse they must close their shops. If they refused to comply they should be stigmatised as the offspring of Christians. Accordingly, all classes, Mussulmans as well as Hindoos, shut up their shops. There was, further, some talk of sending a petition by telegraph to Lord Canning, but we believe there was some difficulty in the way of their doing this. The inhabitants all deserted the public wells to which there was any probability of the resort of Christians. Moreover, they instituted anooshthans, or special ceremonies, in the presence of idols, by Brahmins paid for the purpose, to bring about the discomfiture of the native Christians. Some of the more prominent of the native Christians were singled out and commended by name to the special wrath of the gods.

It is quite true that a Mhar woman who marries a Mussulman enjoys immediately free access to the public wells, from which, up to the present time, all native Christians have been rigorously excluded. There is a Mang woman in Nuggur belonging to the Christian community, whose sister is married to a Mussulman; the latter has access to wells, the former has not. This one fact speaks volumes as to the degree of concession made to the caste prejudices of the Hindoos by the Mahomedans and by the British. There is one religion upon which all are now agreed to put the stamp of a peculiar opprobrium, and that is the Christian religion; and the petitioners of Ahmednuggur have done neither more nor less than humbly petition the Christian Government of this country to declare authoritatively that the Christian religion is the most opprobrious of all religions. And they actually expected to succeed; were intensely disappointed because Christians were permitted to enjoy the rights enjoyed by other classes of the community generally. What an idea must the people have of the indifference of Government to all religious principles! The authorities deserve great credit for their present decision. It is to be hoped that none will take up the idea that caste among Christians is recognised by the Government, or that a converted Mhar or Mang will be excluded from the public wells, while a converted Brahmin is not.

We have great satisfaction in appending to the above remarks the following resolution of Government on the petition of Anundrao Babajee Deshpandey and other Hindoo inhabitants of Ahmednuggur :—

"The magistrate may be instructed to inform Anundrao Babajee Deshpandey that Government will not for a moment entertain so absurd and so insulting an application as that contained in the petition signed by himself and a few other misguided persons at Ahmednuggur. The petitioners should be reminded that, by their own showing, the fountains in question were established by Mahomedan kings; and that, in the days of those kings, no Hindoo would have dared to suggest that they were polluted by being used by Mussulmans. If they could be used without pollution by any Dher or Mang who embraced the Mahomedan religion, how can they be polluted by the use of Christian converts? The petitioners have forgotten their own shasters, which declare that the caste of the ruler, whatever it may be, is equal to the highest; and they have perverted the declaration in the Queen's proclamation, which expressly states that none should be molested by reason of their religious faith, into an argument for molesting and insulting those who profess the same faith which the Queen not merely acknowledges, but of which she proclaims herself the Defender."

This is an admirable letter, and we rejoice to see Government taking up its true position with reference to caste. The demand of the petitioners is severely but justly characterised; and we hope that the rebuke thus administered will be sufficient to deter the natives of this country, henceforth, from asking Government to affix a stigma to the profession of Christianity.—Bombay Guardian.

MISCELLANEOUS.

EXPEDITION AGAINST THE WAGHERS.—All the transports were off Dwarka by the afternoon of the 18th October, so in order to make Colonel Scobie's force, which was supposed to be about five miles inland, aware of our presence, the Feroze steamed in abreast of the town, and fired eight shells into it, this being the preconcerted signal, and then anchored to the north-west, nearly opposite to Roosun bund, which is about two miles to the northward of Dwarka. This is the only place where the troops could effect a landing, on account of the surf which runs all along the coast, with the exception of a few sheltered places. But there is rather an imposing looking fort there, and we noticed horsemen riding between it and the town, evidently making preparations to defend it; so the Clyde gunboat, towing the Feroze, Berenice, and Zenobia's 1st cutters, in charge of Lieut. Wilson, anchored off it, and commenced firing, which was kept up for some time, when the boats' crews landed, rushed up to the fort, and took it, much to the surprise of everybody, as it was expected to have been decided in the usual Wagher style, and the colonel commanding the field force stated that he would not have landed there with less than 1,000 men; so this was a feather in Jack's cap. On the afternoon of the next day, the 20th ultimo, the troops disembarked, and in conjunction with Colonel Scobie's force, formed a circle round the land side of the town. I forgot to mention that as soon as the Jacks had taken the fort, Lieut. Nixon, commanding the Clyde, landed a 24-pounder howitzer, which afterwards harassed the enemy a good deal, disabling a gun they brought to the front, killing two, and wounding a good many. The first thing to be done was to disable the guns, of which they appear to have a good many, and a 10-inch mortar. The artillery have gradually got their batteries to work, and for the last three days the Feroze and Zenobia have been shelling the town. At first the military bigwigs were cautious about going to work, lest they should fire over into the troops on the other side; but after seeing the practice that was made at Beyt by the ships, they ought to have had more confidence; however, they appear to have recovered. The firing from the ships is heavier than the whole of the shore batteries put together. H. M.'s sloop Clive arrived on the 25th, when a naval brigade was formed, consisting of three lieutenants,—Lieutenant Sedley, commanding, Lieutenant Crocker, from the Feroze, Lieutenant Hall, from the Zenobia, nine midshipmen, and 120 blue jackets. These landed on the 26th, and the next morning at once took up a position by Moriatt's column, about 150 yards from the outer fort and temples, taking possession of a square look-out tower. They were not long left in peace here, for the enemy commenced a heavy fire of musketry, and after a short time brought a gun to bear on them. Before dark they had two officers, Lieut. Hall and Mr. Midshipman Pulman, and four men wounded. They had brought a 12-pounder field piece up with them, but it became disabled after a few rounds; so they had no means of silencing the enemy's gun, and there was no cover for them beyond that afforded at the back of the square tower, the single walls of which were too thin to resist round shot, and there was barely room for 130 men. However, Lieut. Sedley was determined to hold the position at all hazards, as it was an important one. That night the Waghers made a sortie in two parties, one in front and one came round by the beach under the high ground on which the tower stands. They rushed on, yelling like fiends, but were repulsed with great loss: killed one of our men and wounded five others. The man who was killed was almost cut in two, and otherwise frightfully mangled. The number of the enemy killed is not known, but they were three hours carrying away their wounded. There must already have been a great number killed, as every night large fires are seen burning their dead. Yesterday two more wounded were added to the Naval Brigade casualties in trying to take possession of an advanced fort. When I say trying, it was taken, and before you could make that popular exclamation, "Jack Robinson," a midshipman was climbing up to the top of the temple, and in five minutes more the Union Jack was flying where the Wagher flag had been. The breastworks the enemy had built-up were knocked down; the party then retired, as the place was too large and in too crumbling a state to hold, and there was a heavy fire of musketry on them. The batteries are hard at work as I write, and the ships will open fire again in a few minutes. On the evening of Sunday, the 30th, the Waghers made a sortie on the sailors' battery, but were repulsed with severe loss. Early on the Tuesday morning they evacuated the fort, cutting their way through the pickets of the 28th regiment, severely wounding one officer and three men of the regiments. They passed close to the 28th camp, but that corps could not do anything towards intercepting them, owing to the darkness. On Wednesday a corps of Europeans proceeded to the Fort of Wasser, which had previously been occupied by some of the Waghers, but arriving there they found that fort also deserted. The enemy either carried away or buried all their treasure, as no loot of any consequence has been found. Measures were taken to prevent a repetition of the occurrences at Beyt; but there was no necessity for resorting to them. On Monday evening the enemy were observed burying their dead, that lay scattered over the ground in considerable numbers. The navy and the transports rendered every possible assistance to the troops by the very heavy fire they kept up from the steamers, as well as from the sailors' batteries ashore, both at Beyt and Dwarka. The European troops were making preparations to return, and will probably arrive in a day or two. It is believed that the 6th Regt. will join Colonel Scobie's force in pursuit of the Waghers. The volunteers from the crews of the transports, particularly of the Ramillies, were exposed for a considerable time to a very heavy fire of musketry, in which one of them was wounded.—Bombay Gazette.

GOVERNMENT LIBERITY.—The ship Cospatrick left Kurrachee on the 21st October, with 400 discharged soldiers, in charge of nine officers, for England. Government have only engaged five cabins in this vessel for the officers proceeding by her, of which three will be taken up by married people, one by the surgeon, and there thus will be left but one cabin for the five remaining officers, who will have to club in one cabin, and that not over large. How they will manage, and what degree of comfort they will have on the voyage, are questions easier put than answered. The Cospatrick is a large vessel, and better arrangements might have been made. Surely the authorities in Bombay have not in their minds coupled the unoffending officers with the men who have so enraged them by insisting on their liberation.

DEPARTURE OF SIR BARTLE FRERE.—On Saturday morning, October 15, Sir Bartle and Lady Frere quitted the shores of Sind, greatly to the regret of all its inhabitants. It had been arranged that, as the most convenient and least fatiguing mode of conveyance, a special train should convey the ex-commissioner and his friends to the point of embarkation. Accordingly, by half past seven o'clock a large number of those who wished to show a last mark of their respect and esteem for the statesman whom all had learned to regard as a friend, had assembled at the Ice House, which had been fixed on as the place of departure. Soon after, the firing of the salute announced that Sir Bartle had left Government House, and in a few minutes all were seated, and the train started. As it passed the native town, many of the natives assembled to waive a last adieu to one who has been so eminently successful in winning their regard. On the train sped, and hitherto all went smoothly and well. The Bunder gates had been closed for some time previously, and there was nothing to interrupt the progress of this, the first passenger train upon the Napier Mole. When it arrived to within about 300 yards of the head of the pier, the train had to pass a pair of facing-points on a sharp curve. The engine and tender passed through safely; but the light trunk immediately following left the rails, taking with it the first passenger carriage. The rest of the carriages remained on the line. As the engine had been proceeding very slowly and cautiously, the train was immediately stopped; and with the exception of a few joltings received by the passengers in the first carriages, no damage was done. Carriages were instantly procured to convey the commissioner's party the short remaining distance. The pier, which was carpeted in its entire length, had been tastefully decorated by order of Brigadier Hale. Upon it a guard of honour was drawn up, who saluted the arrival of the commissioner, the band of the 1st fusiliers striking up the national anthem. Here all bade a sorrowful adieu to one who will long be remembered in Sind with gratitude and affection. Immediately on Sir Bartle taking his place in the boat which was to convey him to the steamer, the guns of the battery, which had been brought down for the occasion, boomed forth a loud salute of fifteen guns, and amid enthusiastic and continued cheers, and the strains of "Should auld Acquaintance be forgot" from the band, the boat glided from the pier. As it passed the shipping which was dressed with flags, the various crews took up and prolonged the cheers, and each vessel dipped its ensign in salute. And thus, amid the good wishes and regrets of all, Sir Bartle Frere quitted the province, which, for nine long years, he has governed with so much ability and success.

TESTIMONIAL TO THE REV. G. COOK.—The Rev. George Cook having resigned the office of Secretary of the Bombay Auxiliary Bible Society, it was resolved, on the motion of the Rev. Dr. Wilson, the chairman, and the unanimous response of the committee, at a meeting on the 1st inst.:—"That the meeting, on receiving Mr. Cook's resignation, beg to record their deep gratitude for his able, zealous, faithful, and efficient services as general secretary of the Society during the long period of fourteen years, during which his constant attendance at its meetings, his happy arrangements for conducting its business, and the satisfactory manner in which he has discharged his disinterested duties, have been marked and approved by all; and that this resolution appear in the next annual report of the Society." It was also resolved, on the motion of the Rev. J. S. Robertson, seconded by D. J. Kennelly, Esq., I. N., that a copy of an English Bible, bearing, as an inscription, the preceding resolution, be presented to Mr. Cook, as a permanent token of the Society's regard.

A NEW BARRISTER.—Mr. W. P. Hale, who arrived by the ship Windsor Castle from England, was sworn in on the 10th November as a barrister of the Supreme Court.

RAILWAY OPERATIONS.—The Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway Company intend commencing operations very shortly in the construction of their line on the Bombay side, breaking ground at Mahim and working up towards Tarapore. Sanction has not as yet been obtained to their beginning the portion between Bombay and Mahim. The line about to be constructed at Mahim will extend about thirty miles, which it is expected will be let by contract. Messrs. Baily and Bucknell, Civil Engineers, are now actively engaged in forwarding overseers, gangs of coolies, &c., to the works now going on at Tarapore and Bulsar.

MR. J. D. INVERARITY.—A salute of thirteen guns on Sunday, the 23rd October, announced the arrival, at Kurrachee, of Mr. J. D. Inverarity, the new Commissioner, who, we hope, may be as successful as his predecessor in developing the resources of the country, and ameliorating the condition and winning the love of its inhabitants.

MILITARY FINANCE COMMISSION.—The members of the Military Finance Commission, Colonels Jameson, Balfour, and Burn, having concluded their inquiries in the Bombay Presidency, proceeded to Madras by the steamer Ganges, on the 31st October. They will remain at Madras for about three months, and then proceed to Calcutta.

INDIAN NAVY.—It is rumoured that the Indian navy is to be abolished within the next few months, an option being allowed its officers to enter the Royal navy, or to retire upon the pension of their rank. We have long looked with extreme jealousy upon the forty lakhs annually expended upon the service, but we trust that considerate regard will be given to the position of the officers in effecting the absorption.

Foreign Dept., Camp Nababgunge, Oct. 19.—Mr. T. D. Forsyth, sec. to chief commissioner, Oude, returned from leave and resumed charge of his office, on 10th inst.

Maj. E. K. Elliott received charge of the offices of commissioner and agent to the Gov. gen. for the province of Nagpore, from Mr. G. A. C. Plowden, on 10th inst.

Capt. W. G. Cumming received command of the Malwa Bheel corps from Capt. E. F. Waterman, on 20th ult.

The services of Lieut. col. Hinde, comdg. Rewah levies, are temp. placed at disposal of the military dept., for duty with his regt.

A REVIVAL.

On revient toujours à ses premiers amours.

Mr. Jones, at least, is true to his first passion—a passion for fault-finding and for hearing himself speak. This two-fold gratification he proposes to afford himself on the fourteenth day of the present month, when the half-yearly general Court meeting of the Directors of the East-India Company will furnish him with an opportunity of being both talkative and disagreeable. It will be seen, by referring to our advertisement columns, that this verbose gentleman is prepared to make an onslaught on the Council of India after the fashion of his ancient attacks on the old Court of Directors. Instead of burying his tomahawk, as most peaceably-minded men would have done under similar circumstances, Mr. Jones seems to have given it a fresh edge, preparatory to dancing his war-dance and bedaubing himself with his war-paint. Already is he panting for the affray, and his shrill whoop of defiance is ringing in our ears and causing our hair to stand on end. Unhappy Council of India! Verily, thy scalp is in danger! Mr. Jones has discovered that “the principles of self-election and Government nomination give no security for the redress of private and public wrongs”—he gives precedence to private considerations—“and places the investments of British capitalists at the mercy of a secret and irresponsible authority.” But the only investment with which the Court of Directors have now anything to do is the old East-India Stock—their functions being strictly confined to the agreeable and not very onerous duty of distributing the dividends to the various holders of that stock. We have infinite respect for those worthy gentlemen, individually and collectively, but we apprehend that they have about as much to do with the formation of the Council of India as have the trustees of Waterloo-bridge with the principle of the arch. We question, indeed, if Mr. Jones's brother proprietors will thank him very heartily for placing them in the false position of travelling beyond their legitimate province, even if they forgive him for taking up their time with one of his well-known dissertations, commencing with the Aryan invasion but seldom getting beyond the Mahomedan era. In the present instance they may expect the honourable proprietor to begin with a succinct account of the constitution of the Saxon Wittenagemote, and to reach at least as far as the signing of the Great Charter at Runnymede,—before the Court is counted out. But as even Nero was regretted by at least one person, surely Mr. Jones also must have one friend or charitable well-wisher, who will point out to him that in the first place his motion is couched in offensive language and that it contains an insinuation which is an insult to any body of gentlemen, and in the second place that the Court of Directors as at present constituted are simply cashiers of a particular kind of dividends, and have no existence as a deliberative assembly.

THE HAPPY WARRIOR.*

A well-known writer in the current number of the “Universal Review,” with singular felicity, likens the late Sir Henry Lawrence to Wordsworth's beau idéal of a “Happy Warrior”—

“Who, if he rise to station of command,
Rises by open means; and there will stand
On honourable terms, or else retire;
And in himself possess his own desire;
Who comprehends his trust, and to the same Keeps faithful with a singleness of aim.

Whose powers shed round him in the common strife,
Or mild concerns of ordinary life,
A constant influence, a peculiar grace;
But who, if he be called upon to face
Some awful moment to which Heaven has joined Great issues, good or bad, for human kind,
Is happy as a Lover, and attired
With sudden brightness, like a man inspired.

He who, though thus endued with a sense
And faculty for storm and turbulence,
Is yet a soul whose master-bias leans
To home-felt pleasures and to gentle scenes;
Sweet images! which, whereso'er he be,
Are at his heart; and such fidelity
It is his darling passion to approve,
More brave for this, that he hath much to love.”

We would not weaken this life-like portrait by any touches of our own, nor do we care to gild refined gold, or detract from the pale purity of the lily. Our object is simply to string together some of the “orient pearls” of wisdom which a truly great and good man in vain presented to a public that wilfully closed its ears to the charmer, no matter how wise or potent his spell. It needed not the sun-set of life to give Sir Henry Lawrence that “mystical lore” which sees afar off the approaching shadows of coming events. His prescience sprang from a calm unbiassed judgment, untroubled by passion or prejudice, which viewed men and things in their true light, and knew how to distinguish semblances from realities. He detected the treacherous whirlpools beneath the unruffled surface, and saw the grim monsters of the deep awaiting their unconscious prey. But all in vain he lifted the voice of warning. Few gave heed to his words, and certainly not one of those who had the power to divert the vessel of the State from the perilous course she was pursuing. Some time ago it was the fashion to extract from Sir Charles Napier's letters all sorts of prophetic passages, without reference to the contradictory opinions expressed, very likely, on the same day. Very different is the case with Sir Henry Lawrence. His statements are always clear, concise, and self-consistent. Having something to say, he said it in language which no one could either misunderstand or misconstrue, and as he never wrote until he had taken time to arrive at a just conclusion, he never required to retract his words or explain away their meaning. Though not what is called a “Genius,” or endowed with any very brilliant gifts, his views and opinions are worthy of the serious consideration of every Indian statesman and military commander, and have received the most striking confirmation in the events of the last two years. There is scarcely a single defect in the organisation of the Bengal army which has been prominently brought to light by the late mutiny that was not pointed out in his “Essay on the Military Defence of our Indian Empire,” written in 1844. To the last hour of his useful and truly Christian life, Sir Henry felt a deep and practical interest in all that concerned the welfare, discipline, and effectiveness of the Indian army, nor did his large heart allow him to draw any invidious distinctions between the European soldier and the native sepoy. His natural sympathies, indeed, might be, and no doubt were, more warmly enlisted on behalf of his fellow-countrymen and co-religionists, but in his official capacity he recognised no difference between the conquering and the conquered race, and had only one system of weights and measures for all his fellow-subjects, whatever their creed or colour. But we have wandered wide of our mark in this feeble attempt to express our own feelings of respect and admiration for one of the noblest characters that has in any age illustrated the annals of any country. We now revert to our original purpose of placing before our readers a few samples of the rich and genuine ore which crops out in every page of these admirable Essays. Let us hear, then, what Sir Henry had to say on the subject of promotion by seniority, for though his remarks in this instance referred more particularly to the artillery corps, they will bear a far wider application.

“Thirty or forty per cent. can read and write; but not one in a hundred studies his duty scientifically; and the obvious reason is, that he has not the shadow of a motive for so doing. If he can read and write, and is decently sober, he is sure to become a sergeant. If he is smart at drill, and well-behaved, and not too independent, he may rise to be a sergeant-major. Or if his liver is sound, he may live to be a conductor, or even at the age of seventy a deputy commissary of ordnance. And so in the Golundauze; if he has taken care of himself, and not expended his vital energies as a young man, he will live to be an old one; and when physically and mentally disqualified, he may become a soobadar, or even a soobadar bahadur; and all this even though he may be very little deserving of such promotion. He has the negative merit of having outlived the companions of his youth, who possibly got maimed, or killed, or lost their health, when he who gained the palm was absent from his post, or slinking at it; but we are strongly of opinion that old age is but a negative virtue, and should not without positive merit be rewarded in soldiers; but that the young man should have some motive to emulate the veteran.”

Holding these heretical opinions as to the merit of imbecility, Sir Henry was not likely to entertain a high respect for the average run of native officers.

“Native officers,” he wrote, “have long since been voted useless. They are great incumbrances in war; they are non-entities in peace. Occasionally a lion-hearted old fellow of seventy will keep up with his company in a charge, or on a forced march; but he forthwith dies of exhaustion, after having, perhaps, for a year or more, during the campaign, put the commissariat to the expense of carrying grain for him, three or four servants, a pony, and a half or a whole camel. In quarters they have nothing to do but to brood over their position; to feel that they are nominally officers, and yet that the sergeant-major is liable to command them, and that beardless boys are every day put over them. At Vellore and elsewhere they did not prevent or give warning of intended massacre and insurrection; nor have they in the late cases of the 60th, 34th, 64th, and of the cavalry and artillery, either given a clue to their officers of what was the real motive of discontent, or do they appear to have striven to prevent insubordination. We conceive that the motive of Government in having three native officers attached to each company and troop—who have nothing to do, and whose ages may be said to average sixty-two—must be their supposed moral influence with the sepoys, and the encouragement given to the latter by placing before their eyes their kinsmen promoted to such grades, and living comfortably and in honour among them. If such be the reason, how much more potent would this moral influence be if the old men were comfortably seated under their own neem or mango trees, talking to their grand-children and to the wondering villagers gathered around them, of the beneficence of the Hon. Company, instead of toiling in the hot winds on treasure parties, or vexing themselves under young European officers in petty and discomforting duties unsuitable to their age, in which, though they are present in person, they can scarcely be called performers."

The want of inducement for native gentlemen, or men of real ability, to enter the British service, was insisted upon by Sir Henry, fifteen years ago, as emphatically as by any of the witnesses, wise after the event, who gave evidence before the Committee on the Re-organisation of the Indian Army:—

"Our regular issue of pay," he observed, "and our pension-establishment, are the foundation-stones of our rule; and there cannot be a doubt that for the lower orders our service is a splendid one. But it offers no inducement to superior intellects, or more stirring spirits. Men so endowed, knowing they can always gain their bread in every quarter, leave us in disgust, and rise to rank in foreign services. Did the times avail, they would raise standards of their own, and turn against us the discipline they learnt in our ranks. Rank and competence in our service would bind such men to our interests. It is a straw that turns the current. Such men as Nadir Shah and Hyder Ally did not, at the outset, aim at sovereignty; their ambition increased with their success, and what early in life would have contented them was at a later day despised. There are many commandants in the Mahratta and Sikh service, who were privates in our army. General Dhokul Singh, now in Lahore, was a drill naick in one of our sepoy corps; and Rajah Buktawar Singh, one of the richest and most powerful men in Oude, was a havidar in our cavalry. But is it not absurd that the rank of subadar-major and russaldar-major is the highest that a native can attain in a native army of nearly 300,000 men—in a land, too, that above all things has been accustomed to see military merit rewarded, and to witness the successive rise of families from the lowest conditions, owing to gallantry in the field?"

Since the foregoing remarks were penned the position assumed by the writer has been considerably strengthened by the annexation of the Punjab and of Oude, and the consequent blocking-up of any opening for ambition, or merit, in those quarters. Another fundamental error, more than once dwelt upon in these Essays, lay at the very root of the whole system—we allude, of course, to the mode of enlistment.

"Our Sepoys," wrote Sir Harry in 1844, "come too much from the same parts of the country; Oude, the Lower Doab, and Upper Behar. There is too much of clanship among them, and the evil should be remedied by enlisting in the Saharunpoor and Delhi districts, in the hill regions, and in the Malay and Burmah States. We laugh at our hill men; but they are much the same class as form Rajah Golab Singh's formidable Jumboos. But what inducement do we offer to any but coolies to enter the Sinnoor and Nussuree battalions, when we give the men only five rupees a month, proportionably pay native officers, and calling the corps local battalions, have them one day at Bhurtpoor, the next at Ferozepoor? Such policy is very bad; and we should rather encourage the military classes in the hills to enter all our corps. We would have, too, some companies, or regiments, of Malays, of Chinamen, of Miangs, and Burmese; and mix them up at large stations with our sepoy corps. We would go further, and would encourage the now despised Eurasians to enter our ranks, either into sepoy corps where one or two here and there would be useful, or as detached companies or corps. We are aware that they are not considered a warlike race. We might make them so, and we doubt not with good officers could do so. Courage goes much by opinion, and many a man behaves as a hero or a coward, according as he considers he is expected to behave. Once, two Roman legions held Britain; now as many Britons might hold Italy."

This is well put; and had Sir Henry been spared a few months longer, he would have seen his prediction fulfilled, and the despised Eurasians doing soldierly service in the field. In 1856 he wrote still more forcibly on the necessity of balancing class against class, race against race. No apology, we feel assured, need be made for the length of the following extract from the paper just alluded to, headed, "Army Reform:—"

"The whole system is wrong. In a few years the survivors of those Sikhs will be simply low-caste Hindus; they will have learnt to object to mess together, and in all points will be as helpless and as subservient as Brahmins or Rajpoots. The plan to be followed, to get and to keep the best soldiers throughout India, and to quietly oppose class against class, and tribe against tribe, is to have separate regiments of each creed or class, filling up half, three fourths, or even more of the commissioned and non-commissioned ranks from their own numbers. Thus there might be Brahmmin, Rajpoot, Aheer, Goojur, Meena, Ranghur, Patan, Mogul, Malay, Gorkha, and Sikh regiments, as also Chumar and Sweeper ones. Each to have a sprinkling of other castes or tribes, stout fellows, with more than their proportion of promotion, and therefore able to hold their own. Say, in a corps of Brahmmins, a hundred Rajpoots, and as many Mahomedans. In one of Sweepers, a couple of hundred Mahomedans. Similarly with Sikhs and Gorkhas, a sprinkling of Hill Rajpoots and Moslems. Such dilutions will be sufficient to prevent, or at least to bring to light, internal dissatisfaction; while it not only cuts off sectarian influence, but unostentatiously opposes class to class and party to party. We have not a doubt that, thus organised, the low-caste man, who, under present influences, is the mere creature of the Brahmmin, would as readily meet him with the bayonet, as he would a Mahomedan. There might still be many regiments composed much as at present, only keeping the very high, and very low castes more apart. Some people will say that Brahmmins will not act with low-caste men. We happen to know better. In the Bombay army Sweeper subadars command Brahmmin sepoy. We ourselves have seen Bheels and Meenas, Grassias and Patans, Aheers and Rajpoots, all shoulder to shoulder, all working well and amicably together, notwithstanding that the first two tribes eat carrion, and are classed little, if at all, above Mehturs. We are aware that such arrangements are only to be carried out by tact and determination. In a certain Bheel corps the Grassias and others combined to refuse to salute the first Bheel who was promoted to the rank of a subadar. The commanding officer, having seated the Bheel on a chair by his side, called in the whole company, asked each individual his intentions, ordered him to salute the Bheel and pass on. The Hindustanis did so; three Grassias refused. On the instant they were discharged. There was no more hesitation; the Bheel subadar ever afterwards was duly obeyed. It is, however, well known that low-caste men give most trouble about caste; that the Sweepers of the Bombay and Madras armies are more fanciful than the Brahmmins and Rajpoots. Religionists, too, whether Hindoo or Mahomedan, whether Syuds, or Brahmmins, or Swamees, influence only the mob; they do not touch each other. They should therefore have their energies, as far as possible, confined to their own classes."

Anticipating the future, Sir Henry earnestly inculcates the expediency of locating the mass of European troops at Hill stations, which should eventually communicate by railways with any point in the plains. "We should then realise Hyder Ally's notion, and really keep our Europeans in cages, ready to let slip on occasions of necessity." Many years after this pregnant advice was given he still insisted on the precarious nature of our tenure of India:—

"It is right always," he said, "to bear in mind that we are but encamped in the land. We are dwelling 'in the tents of Shem.' We have yet to prove the permanence of the encampment, whether it is to be rudely broken up in blood, whether to be a Mogul 'Oordoo,' a Mahratta or a Sikh 'Lushkur' or 'Chao-nee'; or whether after a fertilising and blessed rule of centuries we are voluntarily to hand over regenerated India to her own educated and enlightened sons. But whatever be our and India's destinies, our obvious duty is to avoid all unnecessary occasion of danger, at the same time always calmly and unostentatiously to stand to our arms. The spirit of Wellington's and Cromwell's words should be our motto, and always in our hearts, 'Trust in God.' 'Keep your treaties, and 'Keep your powder dry.'"

The mens prescia mali peeps out more unmistakably in the following paragraph:—

"The treasury at Delhi is in the city, as is the magazine; the latter is in a sort of fort,—a very defenceless building, outside of which in the street, we understand, a party of sepoy was placed, when the news of the Cabul disasters arrived. We might take a circuit of the country and show how many mistakes we have committed, and how much impunity has emboldened us in error; and how unmindful we have been that what occurred in the city of Cabul may some day occur at Delhi, Benares, or Bareilly."

The length of the preceding extracts prevents us from noticing, as we had intended, Sir Henry's opinion of the relative merits of Regular and Irregular Cavalry, and on many points connected with the organisation of the Indian army. We sincerely trust, however, that these Essays have not been published too late to influence the authorities in the reconstruction of the Bengal native army, but that they will still listen to the voice of one speaking from the grave. We had, likewise, proposed to quote largely from Sir Henry's political papers, but space is already failing us. We must, therefore, content ourselves with briefly stating that he was opposed to the annexation policy, and advocated forbearance even under repeated insults. Inveterate contumacy he would have visited on the head of the offender alone, and not on his innocent people. The paramount Power, he held, should be restrained by feelings of delicacy from taking advantage of the weakness and folly of a weak, ignorant, besotted dependent. If the occupier of the guddee was utterly incapable, let him be dethroned in favour of the nearest of kin who held out better promise; but in no case should the errors of an individual be regarded as sufficient excuse for the absorption of his territory and the subjugation of his subjects. On these grounds he objected to the annexation of Oude, and urgently recommended the simple administration of its affairs on behalf of the people. Not a rupee, he said, should pass into the Company's coffers; but as the British Government was in some measure answerable for the sufferings of the country through the support it afforded to the King and his vicious Court, it was bound to make the only compensation in its power by dethroning the actual ruler, and rendering justice accessible to the humblest and poorest ryot. In later years, after his advice had been set at nought, he warned the Government against placing too much reliance on the deceptive tranquillity which seemed to prevail, and concluded his paper on Army Reform with the following words—with which we also must take leave of this most suggestive and interesting volume:—

"A paragraph in the Delhi Gazette, announcing that the Oude authorities are disposed to dispense with the service of the regular regiments for Lucknow, tempts a few further words of caution—though we do not altogether credit the newspaper report. The earliest days of annexation are not the safest. Be liberal, considerate, and merciful, but be prompt, watchful, and even quietly suspicious. Let not the loose characters floating on the surface of society, especially such society as Lucknow, be too far tempted, or trusted. Wellington's maxim of 'keeping the troops out of sight,' answered for England; it will not answer for India. There must be trustworthy bayonets, within sight of the understandings, if not of the eyes, of Indian subjects, before they will pay willing obedience, or any revenue. Of late years, the wheels of Government have been moving very fast. Many native prejudices have been shocked. Natives are now threatened with the abolition of polygamy. It would not be difficult to twist this into an attack on Hindooism. At any rate, the faster the vessel glides, the more need of caution, of watching the weather, the rocks, and the shoals. "Felix quem faciunt aliena pericula cautum."

THE GREAT INDIAN MUTINY.

INDIA-OFFICE, NOV. 25.

The Secretary of State for India has received the following Minute of the Governor-general of India, giving cover to a Minute of the Governor of Bombay, regarding the services of civil officers and others in Bombay during the mutiny, in continuation of that published in the London Gazette of the 7th of October, 1859:—

MINUTE BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA, DATED SEPT. 17, 1859.

Services of Civil Officers and Others in Bombay during the Mutiny and Rebellion.

In sending this Minute of the Governor of Bombay, and the accompanying papers, to the Secretary of State, I desire to express my earnest hope that his Lordship's recommendations of the officers therein named may receive the favourable consideration of her Majesty's Government.

Lord Elphinstone's enumeration of the services rendered by officers in civil employ in the west of India, will, of course, carry with it the weight which is due to every recommendation that proceeds from him; but the Government of India would fail in its duty if it did not support those recommendations to the utmost of its authority.

The support which the cause of the British Government in India has received, during the last two anxious years, from the Bombay Government and its officers, stands upon record, and will, I am confident, meet with its just reward. For myself, I shall never cease to remember with admiration the boldness and readiness with which that support was given; but, while I entirely concur in the estimate which Lord Elphinstone has formed of the individual services of those who were under the immediate orders of his Government, I must observe that to Lord Elphinstone himself, foremost of them and above them all, is our debt of gratitude due.

I have long ago expressed my sense of the degree to which India is indebted to the patriotic and unselfish aid which came to us from the Governors of the Cape of Good Hope and of the Mauritius—Sir George Grey and Sir James Higinson—and it only remains for me to declare my entire concurrence in all that Lord Elphinstone and his Council have said on this head. I cannot doubt that her Majesty's Government will adequately appreciate the cordial spirit of friendliness which the Governor-general of Portuguese India, the Viscount de Torres Novas, has evinced towards the traditional allies of his country in the time of their difficulty.

Sept. 17, 1859.

MINUTE OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY, DATED AUGUST 18, 1859.

The Governor-general in Council having called upon us for a report upon the claims of persons who have rendered good service to the State, otherwise than in the field, during the late troubles, for transmission to her Majesty's Secretary of State, I beg to submit the names of those who seem to me best entitled to this distinction.

From the extract from Lord Stanley's letter of the 1st of June, which has been sent for our information, I perceive that the persons, and the services performed, are to be classified under four different heads:—

1. Civil servants.
2. Persons unconnected with Government, who have rendered valuable assistance.
3. Military officers employed on civil duty.
4. Military officers who have rendered service in their military capacity, which, though not such as to render them eligible for promotion, or the distinction of the Bath, is of as high an order as service performed in action against the enemy, and not less worthy of honourable distinction.

Under the first head, I should have placed the name of Sir Bartle Frere, the Commissioner in Scinde, but he has already received the thanks of Parliament and the honours of the Bath; it would therefore be a work of supererogation. I beg, however, respectfully to submit, for the most favourable consideration of her Majesty's Government the services of Mr. I. N. Rose. As the chief civil officer in Sattara, Mr. Rose was placed in a position of great difficulty, and in which he was able to render most valuable service.

The annexation of Sattara was far from being popular among the people of that province. The upper classes especially regarded the introduction of British rule with dislike, and all classes of Mahrattas looked with regret upon the extinction of the line of the great freebooter, who delivered them from the Mahometan yoke, and laid the foundation of that wide-spread confederacy which has been called the Mahratta Empire.

No wonder, then, that the eyes of the disaffected throughout this part of India were turned towards Sattara. The widows of the last two Rajahs, with their adopted sons, had been permitted to occupy the palaces of the Rajah, and to keep up a certain amount of royal state. The disturbances had hardly broken out in the north-west, when Mr. Rose discovered that a plot for the restoration to the Gudi of the adopted son of the elder branch had been for some time hatching. Soon afterwards overtures were made by the conspirators to a sepoy of the 22nd Native Infantry, who was to sound his comrades, and to promise rewards and promotion if the regiment only remained neutral while all the Europeans at the station, including their own officers, were being murdered.

Mr. Rose immediately took the most vigorous measures, and recommended the removal of the widow and adopted son of the elder Rajah from Sattara. This measure he carried out with great prudence and judgment. The Ranees and her adopted son, with their principal advisers, were arrested and conveyed out of the town without the people being aware of it; but in the excited state of people's minds a rescue might have been attempted, and, to prevent this, European escorts had been secretly posted all along the road to Poonah, a distance of upwards of seventy miles.

It was afterwards found that the presence of the rival pretender to the Gudi (the adopted son of the last Rajah), encouraged the hopes of the disaffected to our rule; and he and his adoptive mother were also successfully removed from Sattara.

Throughout the whole period which intervened between the seizure of Delhi by the mutineers and recapture of Gwalior by Sir Hugh Rose there was great excitement in the province of Sattara, and if any outbreak had occurred there it must have extended to the other Mahratta provinces of this Presidency, and probably to Holkar's and to the Gaekwar's States, and we are mainly indebted to Mr. Rose for the frustration of these intrigues, and for the preservation of tranquillity in the Deccan.

Many other civil servants rendered useful service, but the only ones whom it seems to me should be brought to the notice of her Majesty's Government are Mr. Seton Karr, who, during the early part of the period of disturbance, was political agent in the S.M. country, and who, as collector and magistrate of Belgaum, showed great coolness and tact in dealing with the disaffection which undoubtedly prevailed in that part of the country, and especially in Belgaum itself; and Mr. Chapman, who was wounded in an affair with the Bheels in the neighbourhood of Nassik.

I presume, however, that under the first head should be entered the names of gentlemen who are in the service of Government, but who are neither military officers nor civil servants, in the ordinary sense of the term. If so, I would beg to bring the meritorious services of Mr. Souter, the Superintendent of Police in Belgaum, and Mr. Forjett, the Deputy Commissioner of Police in Bombay, to the notice of her Majesty's Government.

In the second category it does not occur to me that there are any persons in this Presidency who have a claim to be inserted.

I now come to military officers in civil employ. The valuable services of Major-general Sir H. Roberts and Brigadier-general Le Grand Jacob, as Political Commissioners in Guzerat, and the Southern Mahratta country, have already been brought to the notice of her Majesty's Government, and have been appropriately (though in the case of Brigadier-general Jacob inadequately) rewarded with the honours of the 2nd and 3rd Class of the Bath.

Sir Richmond Shakespear, who succeeded General Roberts as Political Commissioner (on the latter assuming the command of the Rajpootana Field Force) is also deserving of the favourable consideration of her Majesty's Government. The disarmament of the eastern portion of Guzerat was successfully carried out under his directions, and it is impossible to say how much this salutary measure may have contributed to the maintenance of tranquillity when Tantia Topee appeared upon the borders of these disarmed districts last winter.

The services of Major Merewether, who, during the crisis of 1857, acted as Political Agent on the Scinde frontier, also appear to me to deserve the favourable consideration of her Majesty's Government.

Those of Major Green, who was Political Agent at Khelat, were also doubtless valuable in preventing disturbance upon the frontiers of Scinde, but they have been separately brought to the notice of her Majesty's Government.

Captain Walker, Superintendent of Police at Tanna, who was charged with the suppression of the disturbances in Peint; Major Montgomery, who was Lieutenant of police at Shikarpore, when the native artillery at that station mutinied; Lieutenant Naylor, who held the same appointment at Hyderabad, and anticipated the outbreak at that station by successfully disarming the native artillery by his police; and Captain Graham, who was wounded when co-operating with Brigadier Macan in an attack upon the insurgent Bheels at Shumsherpoore; ought also, in my opinion, to have their names brought to the notice of the Secretary of State; as ought also Captain Buckle, Assistant Political Agent in the Rewa Kanta, of whose energy and judgment it is difficult to speak too highly.

I now come to the last category. Military officers who have rendered good service in their military capacity, otherwise than in the field.

I presume that naval officers are included under this head, and, if so, I beg to bring to the notice of the Secretary of State the valuable assistance which this Government received from Commodore Wellesley, C.B., Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy, and the good services rendered by Lieutenants Chitty and Sweeny, of the Indian Navy, in conveying the different detachments of European troops down the coast, at the height of the monsoon, by which movement, under Providence, the peace of the S. M. country and of this Presidency was preserved. Those of Captain Jenkins, C.B., who proceeded to the Cape and the Mauritius with letters to the Governors of those colonies, asking for assistance, may also be considered worthy of being brought to the notice of her Majesty's Government.

Among military officers the name of Colonel Davidson, Commissary general, has upon a former occasion been brought to the favourable consideration of her Majesty's Government, Major Kane, who organised the transit train to Mhow, and who accompanied Sir Hugh Rose into the Stapooras when he was endeavouring to intercept Tantia Topee; Major Taylor, of the 2nd cavalry, who was wounded in arresting the mutineers who tried to excite the Guzerat horse to raise the green flag, and declare for the rebel cause; Captain Birch, of the Candeish Bheel Corps, who, with a company of his Bheels, disarmed an equal force of the 4th infantry, Gwalior contingent, at Boorbaumpore, and who also performed most gallant service against the insurgent Bheels and Walaytees, at Amba Panee; should also be brought to the notice of the Secretary of State.

The gallant services of Lieut. col. Malcolm and Lieut. Kerr, of the S.M. horse, have already been recognised by her Majesty's Government; and those of Lieut. Macauley, of the Scinde horse, who commanded the Belooch Levy in Rajpootana, have been recommended to the Government of India for recognition.

I have now enumerated the names of those officers, civil and military, who appear to me to have the greatest claims upon the favourable consideration and the notice of her Majesty's Government. I feel that, when so many officers have done good service, the task of selecting some for rewards and distinction must always be a difficult and an invidious one. I have endeavoured to perform it impartially and carefully.

I cannot, however, conclude this minute without adverting to the invaluable assistance which I have at all times received from my honourable colleagues, including Mr. Lumsden, who has since left the service, to whom I was indebted for many excellent suggestions, and whose foresight and appreciation of the nature of the crisis were truly remarkable; and from the Secretary to Government. I would take this opportunity of specially recommending to the favourable consideration of her Majesty's Government the services of Mr. H. L. Anderson, Secretary in the Political, Secret, and Judicial Departments, whose labours during the last two years richly deserve some recognition.

Those of Colonel Melville, Secretary in the Military and Naval Departments, have been already brought to the notice of her Majesty's Government, with a recommendation that the distinction of the Bath may be conferred on him.

I trust also that I may be pardoned if I venture to draw the attention of the Government of India, and of her Majesty's Government, to services rendered in the suppression of the rebellion by some high officers unconnected with this Presidency, and indeed altogether independent of the Government of India.

No one on this side of India is likely to have forgotten the relief which was experienced when the 33rd regiment and Captain Bolton's company of Royal Artillery arrived at Bombay. We had just heard of the mutiny of the 27th Native Infantry at Kolapore; the state of the S.M. country was daily becoming more critical; the European troops in the garrison of Bombay were less than three hundred strong. At this moment the arrival of an entire European regiment and of fifty artillerymen was of incalculable value. It enabled us to send off the whole of the European troops in garrison to Kolapore and Belgaum.

The arrival of the 23rd was followed (about a month afterwards) by that of the 80th from the Cape of Good Hope, which was immediately despatched to Guzerat, which, up to that time, had been almost without European troops. Other regiments and batteries of artillery were subsequently sent from the Cape of Good Hope, some of which, if I am not mistaken, had the honour of forming part of the force which relieved Lucknow. For these most opportune reinforcements we were indebted to the governors of the Mauritius and of the Cape, Sir James Higginson and Sir George Grey.

It is worthy of remark that when Sir James Higginson despatched the first reinforcement of six companies of the 33rd, and fifty men of the royal artillery, he only retained two companies of infantry for the protection of the island; those two companies he sent on as soon as the 4th foot arrived at the Mauritius, and upon a second application from this Government he again sent us a wing of the latter regiment. It is impossible, I think, for any man to have done more than Sir James Higginson did; and I should sincerely rejoice if his conduct upon this occasion was rewarded by some conspicuous mark of the approbation of her Majesty's Government.

Sir George Grey's hearty and efficient assistance calls also, I venture humbly to think, for some recognition.

I may be forgiven for stating a fact which was related to me by Captain Jenkins, who was sent with the letters which we addressed to the Governors of the Mauritius and the Cape by one of the steamers which we engaged for the conveyance of troops from those colonies. I had suggested that, if possible, artillery horses might be sent with the artillerymen from the Cape. There was a difficulty in getting a sufficient number of trained and serviceable horses, and Sir George Grey actually sent his own carriage horses to make up the quota.

Having ventured to mention the great and invaluable assistance rendered to the Government of India by two high officers independent of it, I hope that I may be permitted to allude to the cordial and friendly co-operation which this Government has received throughout the disturbances from his Excellency the Governor-general of Portuguese India, the Viscount de Torres Novas. I believe that it is not generally known that, in permitting British troops to land at Goa during the monsoon of 1857, his Excellency was acting in opposition to his Council, and in violation of the Portuguese laws. He did not tell me so at the time; but, in a private letter which I received from him some months ago, he mentioned that his conduct had been approved by the King's Government, and that a Bill of Indemnity had been passed, absolving him from any penalties he might have incurred. I think this fact sufficiently shows the friendly disposition which has marked the conduct of the present Governor-general of Portuguese India, which has been further manifested in the operations against the Phoon Sa-wunts, and in the transportation of these rebels (as well as of some of the Peint insurgents who sought refuge in the Demann territory) to the Portuguese penal settlement of Timor.

ELPHINSTONE.

THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

On Saturday, the 3rd instant, the nineteenth general annual meeting of proprietors was held at the offices of the company in Leadenhall-street, B. M. Willcox, Esq., M.P., in the chair. After the usual preliminary proceedings, the secretary, Mr. Howell, read the report, which showed the state of the company's financial accounts up to September 30th last, to be as follows:—The company then stood possessed of stock in ships, less the amount set apart for depreciation, £2,111,920. 18s. 11d.; also, of freehold and leasehold property, stock of coals, naval and victualling stores, amounting to £353,211. 7s.; and cash investments, bills receivable, balances in agents' hands, and debts due to the company, £534,646. 0s. 9d.; total assets, £2,999,778. 6s. 8d. The capital received from the proprietors at that date amounted to £1,800,000; and there remains on debentures, £407,000; total capital, £2,207,000. The liabilities of the company, in bills payable and otherwise, amount to £493,283. 18s. 11d.; making the total capital and liabilities, £2,700,283. 18s. 11d.; thus showing a surplus of £299,494. 7s. 9d. This surplus is represented by the balance at the credit of the insurance fund. The revenue account shows that the gross revenue or income of the company from freight, passage money, postal service contracts, conveyance of troops overland to India, and other sources, amounted for the twelve months ending 30th September last, to £2,176,590. 9s. 3d.; that the expenditure and charges on revenue, including interest on debentures, with the reserves made for insurance, wear and tear, and depreciation, for the same period, amounted to £2,006,363. 11s. 6d.; leaving a net profit of £170,226. 17s. 9d. Deduct dividend of 3½ per cent. paid for the half-year ending 31st of March, 1859, with the additional payment of ¼ per cent. made at the same time, £70,000; and the half-year's dividend of 3½ per cent., with the additional payment of 1½ per cent., now about to be recommended, £90,000; balance carried to the guarantee insurance fund, £10,226. 17s. 9d.; making £170,226. 17s. 9d. The Proprietors' Underwriting Account:—The annual premium on the estimated value of the floating property of the company, covering ordinary sea risks, and credited to this account, for the year ended the 30th of September, 1859, is £92,500; deduct net value of the steam-ship Alma, £72,600; balance carried to the guarantee insurance fund, £19,900. The Guarantee Insurance Fund:—At the last annual meeting of the company this fund amounted to £323,774. 19s.; add balance of undivided profits carried to this account, £10,226. 17s. 9d.; ditto of underwriting account, £19,900; total, £353,901. 15s. 9d.; deduct claims and expenses paid on account of the Ava's cargo, £54,407. 9s., and the fund now amounts to £299,494. 7s. 9d. The usual particulars of the tonnage, horse-power, and present employment of each vessel belonging to the company, are annexed in a tabular form. The number of steam-ships was, at the end of the last half-year, fifty-seven; by the loss of the Alma and Canton, the sale of the Sir Jamssetjee Jeejeebhoy, and the introduction of the Moollan, a screw steamer of 2,521 tons, the number is now fifty-five. With reference to the Australian postal service, the directors announce with regret that the anticipations they had formed with respect to the probable passenger traffic on this line have not been realised, and that their experience of working the service via Mauritius has been unsatisfactory. They felt very unwilling, however, to put the communities of this country and the colonies to the inconvenience that would be occasioned by an abrupt termination of the service, and therefore proposed to the Government, as an alternative, a trial of the route via Point de Galle, and an increase of £25,000 per annum to the subsidy. The change of route has been sanctioned, and will come into operation in the spring; but the question of increased subsidy has been deferred until the Home Government has communicated with the Australian colonies. The Mauritius mail service will become a separate one, as originally arranged for. The uncalled capital of the company now amounts to £700,000, and the directors will probably find it necessary to call for an instalment of £5 on each of the new shares on the 1st of April next; of this due notice will, of course, be given. The sum borrowed on debenture is £407,000, but the directors have power to increase it to £500,000. It will be observed that the revenue account exhibits a considerably increased receipt as compared with former years, but the expenditure, from extended services and other causes has advanced in equal ratio. The result of the operations of the year may, however, be considered satisfactory, and the balance of the revenue account warrants the directors in recommending that the usual half-yearly dividend of 3½ per cent., with an additional payment of 1½ per cent. be now declared. The amounts payable under the present report will, therefore, stand as follows:—Dividend, 3½ per cent.; additional payment, 1½ per cent.; Willcox and Anderson Fund, 2 per cent.; in all 7 per cent. And those payments will be made, free of income-tax, in one warrant, on the 28th of December.

The report, after some discussion, was unanimously adopted, and the dividend was declared in conformity with the recommendation of the directors, whose re-election was agreed to, and the meeting adjourned.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE PRUSSIAN EXPEDITION TO JAPAN.—A letter from Dantzic, of the 28th of November, states that the vessels comprising this expedition were about to leave that port. The screw-corvette Arcona was to take its departure at the end of the week, on its way to Japanese waters. This vessel is under the command of Captain Sunderwall and has a crew of 375 men. She will first proceed to Portsmouth, and then to Singapore, without calling at any other port. The frigate Thetis and schooner Frauenlob, however, will sail from Portsmouth and visit Teneriffe, Pernambuco, Bahia, Rio de Janeiro, La Plata, and the Cape of Good Hope, on her way to Singapore. There the squadron will be united under the command of the captain of the Arcona, and will proceed to Siam, China, and Japan; and at the conclusion of the proceedings of the mission the Arcona and Frauenlob will return to Prussia, whilst the Thetis will visit the Sandwich Islands, Valparaiso, and Monte Video, previous to returning to Europe, and will thus have accomplished the circumnavigation of the globe.

NEWSPAPERS TO THE EAST INDIES, MAURITIUS, CEYLON, AUSTRALIA, OR CHINA.—GENERAL POST-OFFICE, Dec. 1.—The public are reminded that notice was given in March last, that in order to pay the cost of transit through Egypt (a cost which has been largely increased, owing, in part, to an important improvement in the service), newspapers sent via Southampton and Suez addressed to the East Indies, Ceylon, Mauritius, Hong Kong, China, Australia, or any other country or place eastward of Suez, will, on the 1st of January next and thenceforward, be subject to an additional charge of 1d., making the rates as follows: Upon a newspaper addressed to the East Indies, 2d. when not exceeding four ounces in weight; 3d. when above four ounces and not exceeding eight ounces in weight—1d. being added for every additional four ounces or fraction of four ounces. Upon newspapers addressed to any of the other countries or places referred to—2d. for each newspaper, of whatever weight. No alteration will be made in the postage of book-packets sent by this route, as they already pay a transit rate; nor will any change be made in the postage of newspapers sent via Marseilles, the present charge on such newspapers being sufficient to cover the cost of transit through Egypt. No alteration, moreover, will be made in the postage of any newspapers which may be directed to go "By private ship." The charge on these newspapers will remain, as at present, 1d. each. The public are further reminded, that, as the exclusive privilege of the Postmaster-general extends only to letters, it is not compulsory on any one to send newspapers through the post, and that they may be forwarded by other channels.

BOOKS.

The Universal Review. No. X. Wm. H. Allen and Co.

Notwithstanding Mr. Jeaffreson's strictures on publishers who introduce into their own periodicals high-flown eulogies of works published by themselves, we shall venture to say a good word in favour of the December number of the Universal, one of the best articles in which—that on Literature and Criticism—is avowedly from Mr. Jeaffreson's own pen. There is also a very able and interesting paper on Representative Institutions in France, by Arthur Dudley, a nom de plume familiar to readers of the Revue des deux mondes and of the Correspondant. M. de Montalembert's favourite organ of communication with the general public. Another very entertaining article gives some curious information as to the signals, organisation, and mode of action of German thieves, tramps, fortune-tellers, and all manner of vagabonds. Mr. Thackeray's last novel, The Virginians, is the subject of a thoughtful and impartial critique, and the number concludes with a sympathetic tribute to the memory of the late Sir Henry Montgomery Lawrence.

Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine. No. DXXX. Wm. Blackwood and Sons.

The only article in the current number of Blackwood relating to Eastern affairs is a spirit-stirring narrative of the "Fight on the Peiho," evidently written by an eye-witness, if not a combatant. The particulars of that gallant though disastrous action are, perhaps, too well known to need repetition, but they have never before been so succinctly or so graphically told. Some characteristic anecdotes, too, are introduced, illustrative of the innate drollery and cool recklessness of British sailors when under fire. The remaining articles are quite up to the high standard the readers of Blackwood have been accustomed to expect, and are as varied as to subject as they are excellent in the mode of treatment.

District Duties during the Revolt in the North-West Provinces of India, in 1857. By H. Dundas Robertson, B.C.S. London: Smith, Elder, and Co.

It was perhaps excusable on the part of Coriolanus when, smarting under the consciousness of a great wrong, he exclaimed, "Alone I did it, boy," but we fear that we cannot be equally lenient towards Mr. Robertson when he claims for himself if not the sole, at least the chief, credit of having upheld British supremacy in the important district of Saharunpoor during the first year of the late rebellion. Ego et rex meus is not a graceful exordium, and in the present case not a truthful one. We do not for a moment wish to derogate from the real value of the services rendered by Mr. Robertson, for we are fully aware that he did his duty like a high-couraged English gentleman; but that is no reason for forgetting that he acted under the orders of another, and that that other was Mr. Robert Spankie, an able and zealous officer, whose merits have been gratefully recognised by no less a personage than the Viceroy. We think, too, that the author has committed an error of judgment in giving only the initial letters of his colleagues' names. The dashing exploits of such leaders as Lieutenants Brownlow and Boisragon ought not to have been lightly passed over as being performed by B—w and B—a; nor do we consider that Mr. Robertson has adopted a magnanimous course in attacking Mr. G—C—, the correspondent of the Times from Lucknow, on the subject of the atrocities perpetrated by the rebels, though we certainly have no sympathy with the latter gentleman. In all other respects this interesting little work deserves much commendation. It gives a capital idea of the sort of life that fell to the lot of the Bengal civilians during that miserable year 1857, and the reader will rise from its perusal with a feeling of increased satisfaction that he, too, is an Englishman. Many curious illustrations of native habits and modes of thought are also afforded; and the reflections based upon the terrible experience so dearly purchased indicate a clear head, a sound judgment, and thorough honesty of purpose. Unfortunately for his success as an author, Mr. Robertson has been late coming into the field, but his book is not the less worthy of being attentively read and gravely pondered.

THE INDUS and its PROVINCES; their Political and Commercial Importance considered in connection with Improved Means of Communication. Illustrated by Statistical Tables and Maps.

By W. P. ANDREW, F.R.G.S., Chairman of the Scinde and Punjab Railways, and Indus Steam Flotilla; Author of "Indian Railways as connected with the Power and Stability of the British Empire in the East," &c., &c., &c.

"The Indus and its Provinces" is really as interesting to the general reader as it is essential to the merchant, the trader, the politician, and the historian.—Morning Chronicle, May 27, 1858.

"Not contented to repose on his laurels as the early advocate for the construction of Railways in India, Mr. Andrew has steadily persevered in developing his original idea, and now, after twelve years of incessant application, we find him concentrating his energies on the improvement of land and river communication in Scinde and the Punjab, though with ulterior views, extending far beyond the immediate benefit of those Provinces."—Allen's Indian Mail, June 12, 1858.

London: DAY and SON, Lithographers to the Queen, 6, Gate-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields.

The Publishers have no hesitation in saying that a more life-like and comprehensive Work than the above has never been issued from the press, conveying as it does such a perfectly accurate idea of everything connected with Anglo-Indian life. Nothing appears to have been omitted; and the drawings manifest, by their accuracy of detail, the fidelity with which each separate subject has been rendered. There are illustrations of everything connected with a domestic household, servants, furniture, washing establishments, tents, camp equipage, carriage, &c., with humorous scenes on the road, and the various styles adopted for locomotion, whether in vehicles drawn by horses or natives, travelling by palanquins, or in doolies, or by the mail-cart, with illustrations exhibiting the peculiarities of the postal arrangements in the East, scenes in travellers' bungalows, in the bazaar, with the economy of the stable, the characteristics of the different breeds of horses as offered for sale by Caubul, Hindostanee, and Arab merchants; nor are the sports of the field omitted—scenes on the turf, tiger-shooting, pig-sticking, and the like—while agriculture has not been forgotten. To each sketch is appended a brief explanation, thus conveying at a glance all the information required, and combining to form a most instructive and amusing work.

NEWBERY'S COD LIVER OIL CAKES.

—“We have examined a specimen of gingerbread made by Messrs. Newbery—each cake containing a teaspoonful of Cod Liver Oil. —Medical Times, 12th Feb., 1859. Eight Cakes, 1s. 9d.; Sixteen (about 1lb.), 3s.—F. NEWBERY and SONS, 45, St. Paul's-churchyard. Established A.D. 1746.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

—Diphtheria, Sore Throat, Glandular Swellings. Some twenty years ago Diphtheria raged in Paris to an alarming extent, and in Boulogne, in 1855, its presence produced consternation by the desolation it left in its track, and gained the appellation of the “Egyptian Pestilence.” Diphtheria is a variety of typhoid fever, perfectly under curative control by Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which assuage the Fever, diminish the thirst, disperse swollen glands, prevent inflammation in the throat, and speedily heal the hazardous ulcerations in the tonsils which always accompany the complaint. Various are the remote causes of this pestilence, but impure blood directly produces it. The Ointment should be most effectually rubbed three times a day into the throat and cheeks.

THE MAGNESIAN EFFERVESCENT is the most agreeable and effective remedy in all cases of Gout, Rheumatism, Acidity, Heartburn, Indigestion, and Biliary Affection, Nausea, Fever, Thirst, and Sea-sickness. It is highly recommended by the profession, and will be found especially valuable to those going to India or travelling in warm climates; as a mild and efficacious saline aperient it stands unequalled, and will be found peculiarly adapted for delicate females and children. To be obtained through all respectable chemists, and wholesale from Messrs. BACALAY, Farringdon-street (put up in stoppered bottles at 4s. 6d. for India), and smaller size at 1s. 10d. and 2s. 9d.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

By the Calcutta Mail of the 15th December we are made acquainted with the exact reading of the grants bestowed on the Oude Talookdars. It will be seen that, although the titles to their estates are in perpetuity, the amount of revenue to be paid will vary from time to time, according to the pleasure of the Supreme Government. The Viceroy has, therefore, avoided the error committed by Lord Cornwallis in the perpetual settlement of Bengal. Each sunnud runs as follows:—

"Know all men that whereas by the proclamation of March, 1858, by his Excellency the Right Hon. the Viceroy and Governor-general of India all proprietary rights in the soil of Oude, with a few special exceptions, were confiscated and passed to the British Government, which became free to dispose of them as it pleased, I, Charles John Wingfield, Chief Commissioner of Oude, under the authority of his Excellency the Governor-general of India in Council, do hereby confer on you the full proprietary right, title, and possession of the estate or estates of , consisting of the villages as per list attached to the kuboolyut you have executed, of which the present Government revenue is . Therefore, this sunnud is given you, in order that it may be known to all whom it may concern that the above estate has been conferred upon you and your heirs for ever, subject to the payment of such annual revenue as may from time to time be imposed, and to the conditions of surrendering all arms, destroying all forts, preventing and reporting crime, rendering any service you may be called upon to perform, and of showing constant good faith, loyalty, zeal, and attachment to the British Government, according to the provisions of the engagement which you have executed; the breach of any one of which at any time shall be held to annul the right and title now conferred on you and your heirs. It is also a condition of this grant that you will, so far as is in your power, promote the agricultural prosperity of your estate, and that all holding under you shall be secured in the possession of all the subordinate rights they formerly enjoyed. As long as the above obligations are observed by you and your heirs in good faith, so long will the British Government maintain you and your heirs as proprietors of the abovementioned estate or estates, in confirmation of which I herewith attach my seal and signature.

"True copy,

"T. D. FORSYTH,

"Secretary to the Chief Commissioner, Oude."

We have elsewhere stated that only two Europeans had been substantially rewarded for their services during the late revolt. This statement we have great pleasure in correcting. Lord Canning, we now learn, has bestowed jaghires worth Rs. 10,600 per annum on Captain Bunbury, Mr. Schelling, the two Captains Orr, and the two Captains Hearsey.

By a recent general order all brigade commands have been abolished; and, for the future, the senior officer in each station will command without drawing any extra allowances.

The superintendent and the managing director of the Assam Company's tea plantations have had a narrow escape from being murdered by the labourers in their employ, in consequence of the low rate of wages. Timely information, however, having reached Debrooghur, Captain Holroyd, the assistant commissioner, instantly marched to the spot with a detachment of sepoy, and arrested the ring-leaders, whom he summarily punished by short sentences of imprisonment. The others immediately acknowledged their fault, and returned to their work.

The China news has been anticipated by the telegrams published in our last issue. Sir Hope Grant has accepted the command of the British expedition, and it is expected that a considerable force of Sikhs will be despatched to the new scene of action.

Mr. Jones' motion for a vote of censure on the constitution of the Council of India has been met, as we anticipated, by a count-out.

The appeal case of "Boldero v. the East India Company" is too well known to our readers to require any explanation of its merits. The pleadings on both sides have terminated, but judgment has been reserved.

BENGAL.

CALCUTTA CORRESPONDENCE.

CALCUTTA, November 18, 1859.

The contrast between England and India at this moment is very remarkable. In England you are busily engaged in preparing an expedition for China. Your papers are full of projects to form an army composed of the discharged Europeans and the Sikh levies to send from India to revenge the slaughter of our men at the Peiho. Here we seem to care no more for China than if it did not exist. The discharged Europeans have left our shores, and there is not a sign of preparation for a move towards China. The Governor-general is amusing himself with vice-regal pageantry among the chiefs and loyal natives of Oude and the North-West Provinces, while the European population is looking on with stern indignation and contempt. At Lucknow the Governor-general has not taken the slightest notice of the glorious garrison that held the Residency for months against overwhelming numbers, while he has covered with honours and rewards many natives of more than doubtful fidelity. At his durbars he has been cheered by the very rabble that was fighting against his authority and thirsting for the blood of the besieged Europeans. This is the kind of popularity, however, that he covets and courts. Sir John Lawrence, who has known India for thirty years, has said, "that it must never be forgotten that we are a strange race in India, and if by any arrangement, however well it may look on paper, or in England, you swamp your own countrymen, and do not let them have the predominant power, you get into a false position." Lord Canning is either of a different opinion, or he does not care for getting us into a false position. To exalt the native and depress the European has been his policy since he came to the country, and he has pursued it steadily and perseveringly. In fact, it would appear to be his only mission—the one purpose for which he came to India, and the one object that employs his thoughts and energies, for he does nothing else. As he is supported by England we are helpless, and must accept the position and bear it with patience. He cannot now do more mischief to us. He has lowered our prestige with the natives as much as it is in his power to do, and we can await the finale of his troubled career without apprehension of further evil. But it is not so with England. It is impossible to say what misfortunes he may inflict on her by his financial or political measures. Should a new and unexpected crisis arrive (and in this marvellous country they appear as suddenly and as unexpectedly as meteors in the night) he will be found as timid, as vacillating, and as incapable as he has shown himself during the crisis of the past. But we speak to you in vain.

The shoe, however, pinches you, as far as your finances are concerned, and you are applying a remedy. You are sending Mr. James Wilson, who is expected to place the finances of India in a sound position. You look upon him as a powerful statesman, who is to direct the Government of India, and make it adopt such measures as will make its revenue meet its expenditure. Now, I will tell you what his position will be and what his power. He will be the fourth member of the Supreme Council of India, with one vote and no more. When he recommends a reduction in the enormous native army, he will be told that the reorganisation of the army of India is under the consideration of the home Government, and that the Government of India has nothing to say to it. If he points to the fact that the landholders of Bengal, the fundholders, and the monied classes pay no taxes, and that they are legitimate subjects for taxation, he will be informed in a trembling whisper that, "on political grounds it would not be wise to tax them." If he hints at reduction of salaries of the official classes, or fixing an income-tax upon them, he will be met with the cry of spoliation and improper interference with "vested rights." If he pens a long paper setting forth his views on finance and financial measures, and sends it to the Governor-general, it will be placed in the box of "papers under consideration," and lie there with a hundred others for months or years. He will find, in short, that he can do nothing, and that a fourth member of the Supreme Council is nobody. If he is a man of spirit he will throw up his appointment, go home, and tell the people of England many truths they are now ignorant of. If not, he will sit in the Council as Gibbon said he sat in the House of Commons—silent and inglorious, but safe.

You will have noticed the strange turn Lord Canning gave to his Proclamation confiscating the territory of Oude. He tried to make it appear that it was not a measure of punishment but one of revenue, and an admirable settlement of the tenure of property. He asserted that giving titles from the Crown would do away with all disputed titles held under native sovereignty. This statement, which is now embodied in the new sunnuds or titles issued by the Crown, places Lord Canning on the horns of a dilemma from which there is no escape. By his Proclamation he exempted by name five or six most loyal landholders, and confiscated the property of all the others. He has now restored the property confiscated, and has boasted that he has given the talookdars a better title than they ever had before. They will no longer be disturbed by pretenders to their property, or subjected to the Hindoo law of undivided properties. Very good; but what, then, becomes of the six loyal men whose property was not confiscated? They are clearly in a much worse position than the others, for they retain only the rights they had before, subject to disputes, &c. To place these six loyal men on a par with the others it will be necessary for the Governor-general to confiscate their property, and then give them a good title from the Crown. Such are the anomalies and absurdities into which the Governor-general has been betrayed by his dishonest attempt to alter the meaning and intention of his Confiscation Proclamation.

There is nothing in the shape of news on this side of India. Everything is in a state of stagnation, and a dull feeling of discontent, I may say disgust, pervades the whole community. Our hope of relief is from England, but it comes not. We look out for the steamers as sister Anne looked for those who were to deliver her sister from the clutches of Bluebeard. They come, but like the clouds of dust that raised the hopes of sister Anne, they appear but to disappoint us.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CAPTAIN CHARLES HOLROYD.—The tea-planters of Upper Assam have subscribed for a handsome testimonial to be presented to Captain Charles Holroyd. It consists of a silver Etruscan claret jug, with a pair of cups, ornamented with fully engraved groups of figures from the antique. The following is the inscription on the salver:—"Presented to Captain Charles Holroyd, Principal Assistant Commissioner, Seebasagor, Upper Assam, by the tea-planters of his district, as a testimony of their high appreciation of the untiring energy, zeal, and courage displayed by him during the alarming crisis in 1857; to whose forethought and skilful arrangements in unravelling the plot of the mutineers to massacre all the Europeans in the province we entirely attribute the safety of our lives and the preservation of our property."

KIRWEE PRIZE MONEY.—The Madras Spectator observes that the prize money for Kirwee amounts in hard cash to seventy-two lakhs, besides property. A brigadier's share of this will be about £20,000.

CASHMERE.—I grieve to learn of Runbeer Singh that his little finger has become stronger than his father's loins, and they were girt with oppression in all conscience. Where excise and customs cannot do their work effectually, monopoly slips in and casts its baneful influence over numerous items, which, if left to themselves, or taxed in reason, would become staple articles of trade. It was said of Goolab Singh that he was the great "Bunee" of the Hills. To this distinction Runbeer Singh will add the very doubtful one of being the monopolist of all he can lay his hands upon. He is the veritable owner of the goose that would lay a golden egg a-day, but which he is daily killing by his most injudicious and most impolitic measures of restriction. A friend now in Cashmere assures me that the country wears a more desolate appearance, is more thinly populated, and more full of complaints than when he visited it only three short years ago. The Raja is independent, it is true. He may do as he pleases with his own, as Lord Dalhousie told the then Chief Commissioner, when Sir John Lawrence pleaded the cause of Jowahir Singh. But does that independence warrant his paralysing the trade of his people with their neighbours? Should it admit of his imposing a tax of ten rupees on ten rupees worth of sugar, which his subjects must have, because he wants to add another and another lakh to the hordes already choking the valleys of Kibersee? Is it because he chooses to do so, to limit the consumption of salt in his dominions by imposing next to prohibitive duties, and bid the traders who visit his country to buy wool and borax and sulphur, that they shall follow one route and no other, because that route affords peculiar facilities for fleecing them of a large share of what would otherwise be their profits?—Delhi Gazette.

SIKH VOLUNTEERS.—The men of the 11th Punjab Infantry, commanded by Captain W. J. F. Stafford, have volunteered for service in China.

CAWNPORE, Oct. 29.—Rajahs at Cawnpore are just now as "plentiful as blackberries." The Rewah Chief came in yesterday morning, accompanied by Captain Osborne, the Political Agent, under a salute of seventeen guns. The smaller Bundelcund chieftains arrived shortly after, with Sir Richmond Shakespeare; and in the afternoon a special train from Allahabad brought in the Rajah of Benares, for whom a salute of thirteen guns was fired. The Rewah man's camp is in the vicinity of the Government Garden, being to the south of it, in the midst of a walled compound. Other chiefs are pitched near the Subabar's Tank. The Benares Rajah has taken up his residence in a pukka kothee.

THE IMPORTATION OF SULPHUR from the Punjab into the North West Provinces has been prohibited by the honourable the Lieutenant-governor of the Punjab, and no future passes will be granted for the transport of this commodity.

COLONEL FILOSE, of the Gwalior service, was invested on the 1st Nov. with the order and insignia of St. Sylvester, by the Roman bishop of Agra, Dr. Persico, after the performance of high mass in the cathedral. The order was conferred by special commission from the Pope.

THE LATE CAPTAIN D'OILY.—A correspondent of the Madras Athenaeum says, on the death of Captain D'Oily, the Deputy Commissioner, the shops and bazaars of Tonghoo were closed as a tribute of respect to his memory, and both Burmese and Karens expressed deep regret. His efforts to civilise the Karens, and induce them to abandon their wars upon each other, and to set free their slaves, were most unremitting and successful.

TELEGRAMS TO AND FROM INDIA.—The manager of the Calcutta Electric Telegraph Office notifies that he is prepared to receive messages of twenty words for transmission to England via Bombay, for Rs. 28-8. The rate of the despatch of a message will be added free of charge, but not the address. To prevent mistakes, all are advised to have their messages, if of consequence, repeated, the charge for which is one-half more. Messages received from England are to be at once transmitted without charge at Bombay.

A NATIVE WIDOWS' FUND.—We have been asked to notice a project recently started in Calcutta to establish a Native Christian Family Fund. It appears that in Tinnevely native Christians support a fund of that kind for the benefit of their widows. They pay rates varying from Rs. 2-8 a month to Rs. 4, according to age, to secure a pension of 1 R. a month for their widows. They may, of course, increase these rates up to Rs. 20 a month as a maximum. Subscription to the fund in Tinnevely is compulsory on all catechists, there are 358 subscribers, and the plan appears to succeed. It is intended to establish a similar fund in Calcutta, and subscriptions are solicited to that end. We regret to oppose a project upon which very considerable labour has been bestowed, but we have no option. The system of cosseting native Christians, of which such a call forms a part, is wholly unsound. If such a fund can be established among the Christians voluntarily, or on compulsion so far as they form component members of a service, it has our warm approval. But it must live or die, like the similar funds of English Christians, by its own strength. A native does not lose the use of his hands or of his head by becoming a Christian. He is generally all the better educated, and he ought to accumulate for himself as a Hindoo or an Englishman does. The guarantee of a missionary society might expediently be given to such a society, both to excite confidence and secure faithful agency, but to the subscriptions we entirely object. If aid must be given let each church support its own widows, but to subscribe money in order to make men fancy they are purchasing what is in part given, seems to us at least waste of means. Let the project live, as other projects live, and take the Christians out of the hot-house.—Friend of India.

MISSION TO ACHEEN.—Captain Haughton, the superintendent of the Andaman Islands, was lately directed to visit Acheen, in the north-west corner of Sumatra, and if possible induce the King to allow some of the Andamanese, said to be detained there in slavery, to accompany him to Port Blair and act as a medium of communication with the islanders. He was furnished with letters to the barbarian from the Governor-general and Governor of the Straits. The Maulmain Advertiser says the mission has proved fruitless. It reached Acheen on the 28th September in the Pluto. Along with Captain Eales, and three others, Captain Haughton was conducted by a sort of ambassador to the palace on the day appointed for an interview. After waiting for two hours they were told:—"The King is asleep and cannot be disturbed." Disgusted, we suppose, or indignant at the slight, the mission returned at once to Port Blair. It was an insult of this kind which gave us Pegu. The present King was called to the throne on account of the wealth made by his father in the British settlement of Penang. He is the son of a Mestizo Arab. A former King of Acheen, Sekunder Muda, in 1613, sent a letter to King James, and desired Captain Best to bring him from the King two white wives, that their children might succeed him on the throne, and the English might then go to their own king for pepper and spices.

RAILWAY TO MIDNAPORE.—A correspondent of the Phenix urges the construction of a branch of the East India Railway from Burdwan to Midnapore. The distance in a straight line, passing between Chuderkonah and Keerpah parallel with the existing road, is about sixty-two miles. By starting from the west bank of the Damoodah, on which a steam ferry could be used, the Roopnarain is the only river that must be bridged. Wood, kunker, and gooting are abundant, and labour is cheap. The pilgrim traffic is immense at one period of the year, and the line could be ultimately expended to Pooree. The traffic in rice and country produce is great. There is no part of Bengal where a railway will not pay, and the one recommended is very practicable. But let it be taken up by some other company than the East India Railway Company and without a guarantee. The main line must be finished before branches are taken in hand.

OFFICERS OF THE BENGAL ARMY.—An order has been issued by the Commander-in-Chief, directing all unemployed officers of the Bengal army, under the rank of major, to proceed at once to the Presidency. Their ulterior destination is not announced, but we believe it probable that, pending instructions from home, they will be directed to do duty with the European depot at Barrackpore. If this be contemplated, we believe the results of such a measure might be most salutary. But it is first necessary that the command of the depot should be placed in firm and stable hands. The late commandant, Major Burroughs, is no longer in authority: the post is vacant, and the Government have now an opportunity of making a good selection. We hope this opportunity will be taken advantage of, for on the character and capacity of the Commandant everything must depend. If a really efficient officer be selected, we believe that much may be effected in the way of accustoming the young officers of the army to the new routine of duty. At the outset they will not have an easy task. Hitherto they have had to do principally with sepoy, and they have, for the most part, perhaps unconsciously to themselves, imbibed habits and notions unfavourable to the command of Europeans. It must be their first care to divest themselves of these old-fashioned fancies. Let them recollect that the officers of the Bengal army are on their trial. There were not wanting men—men too in high places—to assert that the late movement among the Europeans was caused by the inefficiency of their officers. False, as we know this to be, we can well believe that it might have been used as a screen by the parties who were really guilty. This, at least, we saw, that it was eagerly taken up by the advocates of the Horse Guards in England. There were men even in the British House of Commons who did not scruple to throw all blame upon Indian officers. We would say, then, to those officers, that the time is now approaching when they will be called upon to show that the calumnies of their enemies are without foundation. A few months' respite is still before them. Associated at the depot at Barrackpore with Europeans, they have an excellent opportunity of acquiring new habits. A diligent application to duty, under a good officer, would teach them in a few months all that is sufficient to enable them to defy calumny. A few months' attention now will place their future career on a firm and solid basis. The temptations of the metropolis may be great, but they would do well to consider that the advantages of an Indian service are greater. That question is not yet settled, and we believe its settlement yet depends very much upon the conduct and capacities of officers. Hitherto they have been only unfortunate. The policy of their rulers has suffered two armies to slip away from their hands. Let them now, at this period of probation, so renovate their strength, that if, like the weird sibyl of ancient Rome, England should, for a third time, entrust to their charge her most precious possession, they may show that they have profited by the experience of the past, and can make amends by their conduct for the incapacity of their rulers.—Englishman.

GORUCKPORE, Oct. 28.—The last few days have brought us the cold weather and all its consequent advantages. The sick are fast recovering, the sporting appetite becoming keen, and amusements and out-of-doors' fun is the order of the day. Our sportsmen are out long before dawn, and return with a good bag. Eight ducks at one shot is the first pot of the season, at present, accomplished by the band-master of H.M.'s 13th L. I. Heavier sport has been sought in the northern jungle, where Dr. Chalmers bagged a fine one-tusked elephant. The district is now pretty clear of these troublesome fellows, for Jung Bahadoor's little men killed the one which had been so great a pest for many years, and now this fellow, its successor, which got loose from the rebels two years ago, has suffered the penalties of his crimes and set the district at liberty. We are one of the merriest of stations just now, having had races and theatres all the week. The races finished off to-day with foot-races, &c. All parties have enjoyed the fun, from the new levies of sepoy, who are being trained, to the wives and youngsters of the European soldiers. Much gratitude is due to Col. Lord Mark Kerr, whose energetic regard for those under his command gives life to everything that can be devised for their comfort and pleasure. He was not content with getting up the sport, but sent doolies and bearers to carry the women, children, and such of the sick as could be thus assisted, to the grounds. All has gone off remarkably well, with scarcely an accident. On Monday, it is said, that the excitement is to take a new turn. A station pic-nic invites all residents to Dominghus, a beautiful island—Bungalow and pleasure ground, the gift of Mr. Reade to the station, as a sanatorium. In this the officers of the R.A. are the chief movers. Great changes are said to await us. The settlement officers are going out into the district, and it is fully expected the brigade will now be broken up. The brigadier, brigade major, and the commander of the 18th L.I. are off to England almost directly, and Col. King will then be at the head of affairs. There seems no probability of any field operation. The Nana's death is not believed here, and nobody seems to know what to think of Jung Bahadoor, but, of course, he knows what he is about himself.—Hurkaru.

TEA CULTIVATION.—The Englishman has been informed that the Secretary of State for India has called upon the Government of India to give a full report on the success of the cultivation of the tea-plant in Assam, Cachar, &c., its effect on the people of these districts, and the progressive advance of their commerce. The Government is also requested to suggest any measures that might be adopted to assist the planters in extending their manufactures. In consequence of this order, the Government of India has desired the commissioners of those districts to obtain the necessary information, and a circular has been sent to the planters and grantees of waste lands to furnish this information, thus affording them an opportunity of making known their wants. These measures show the vast importance attached to the cultivation of tea in India by the Home Government, and the planters may be assured that every reasonable assistance will be given to them to promote its cultivation.

CALCUTTA CANALS.—The Collector of the Calcutta canals has published his report for the past official year. The total number of boats which entered the canals was 1,78,263, being an increase of 2,829 on the preceding year. The collections amounted to Rs. 3,00,581, showing an increase of Rs. 39,673. The charge of collection and management was 10½ per cent. There is a decrease in the amount of fines, which, with zealous management, is creditable.

NATIVE AIDE-DE-CAMP.—The Calcutta Gazette notifies the appointment of Mahomed Buksh Khan, Sirdar Bahadoor, native commandant of the Oude police, as Aide-de-Camp on the personal staff of the Governor-general. This is, we presume, in place of the office held by the Subadar of the native guard of Government-house, lately abolished.

BOHLICUND, Oct. 19.—To begin with the usual topic of news the weather—there has been a great change since my last. We are now suffering from hot, sultry winds, and the country is quite dry from the want of rain, the Bajhra and Rub-bee crops in particular; the price of flour has much risen in the bazaars. Sir R. Walpole and staff have been reviewing the troops in the district: the last I heard of him was at Loohoo Ghaut, inspecting the Rumsan battalion. Although brigade commands are to be done away with, I do not see well how the duties in this district can be carried on without a brigadier. Colonel Wilkinson, of the 42nd Highlanders, has just left for England; and Colonel Gaiskell has been relieved by Colonel Carleton in command of the artillery. Five of the barracks for the Europeans at Bareilly are nearly finished. They are handsome buildings, lofty and airy, and are decidedly the best I have yet seen in the upper provinces. A melancholy death occurred last week to Dr. St. Aubyn Wilson, of the Bengal army. He was taken ill with fever, whilst travelling from Nainee Tal to Mussoorie, and was found dead in his bed, although the night before he had only complained of slight pains in his head. There is nothing going on at Bareilly in the way of amusement. At Moradabad and Shajehanpore—the 82nd have theatricals and cricket; I hear that there is a club also forming at Bareilly. Captain Russell, of the engineers, has left Shajehanpore for England, and been relieved by Lieutenant Bruce, of the 43rd N.I. The 3rd Irregular Cavalry are coming to Moorshedabad and Shajehanpore from Saugor: a nice change for them, after knocking about the jungles. There has been a report that that fiend the Nana is dead; but it is only native gossip, I think, and most likely given out by him to put the authorities off their guard, whilst he makes a dash for the plains. Parties of the rebels are said to be in the jungles near Gondah, from whence a force has gone out; and no doubt before long we shall hear of them being in the Rhyneeghur district. This sultry weather has caused much sickness in the city, but the European troops continue in good health. There is a rumour that Lady Canning will spend the winter at Nainee Tal; but I doubt it.—Hurkaru.

THE CALCUTTA LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTION was duly inaugurated on Tuesday evening, November 1st, that day being the first anniversary of the assumption of the reins of the Government of India by her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria. The meeting was opened with prayer by the venerable the Archdeacon of Calcutta, after which Sir Mordaunt Wells, the President of the new society, and who took the chair on this occasion, addressed the meeting in a lengthy and animated speech. The inaugural address, delivered by the Rev. Dr. Duff, followed next. On a proposal from the chair, the national anthem was sung by the whole company, and the meeting did not separate without giving three hearty cheers for the Queen.

AUDIT OFFICE.—According to the Phoenix an Audit Office is to be established for the control and supervision of the accounts of the Ordnance, Commissariat, Clothing, Pay, and Stud Departments. The arrangement is a good one. Mr. Wilson's arrival, however, will probably modify this and many other plans.

EXPORTS (Calcutta, Nov. 8).—Operations during the past fortnight have not been extensive, owing to the continued unfavourable accounts from home. Raw Silk and Corals have scarcely engaged attention, and prices have slightly declined. Sugar has been neglected for Europe, and has been sparingly taken for Bombay and the Gulf, and prices are looking down. Saltpetre has slackened in demand, but not in price. Rice continues neglected for Europe, and has been in limited operation for Mauritius, Bourbon, Bombay, and Gulf. Lined has been less sought for, and has slightly declined in price. Rapeseed has been in moderate request, but without any change in price. Jute is in fair demand, but has slightly fallen in price, owing to increased supplies by arrivals of new crop. Hides are in good demand at rather better prices. All other descriptions of produce are in limited operation at former prices.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Nov. 8).—The market has been rather inactive, and sales rather more difficult to effect than they were immediately after the Dooorga Poojah holidays. Prices of most descriptions of Gray Cottons have fallen one to two annas per piece, and sales even at these reductions are rather difficult. The languid state of the market is attributable to the up-country marts being well supplied with goods. The latest accounts from Mirzapore and Furruckabad state that sales at those places were going on steadily at unaltered prices, but that the arrival of two or three inland steamers with goods from Calcutta have fully supplied their wants. Mule Twist has engaged little inquiry, owing to rather unfavourable accounts from the districts, and prices of most counts have receded two to three pie per morah. Turkey Red and other dyed yarns are in limited inquiry. Chintz and Prints are in moderate request. The supplies in the upper provinces are said to be ample to the wants. Metals have rather improved in demand and prices, especially Copper and Spelter.

MADRAS.

THE FIDELITY OF THE MADRAS ARMY.

The present number of the Calcutta Review contains an admirable article on the Madras Army. The writer, throwing aside for the moment all arguments on the constitution best adapted for an Indian Army, describes the internal working of a Madras Regiment. His sketch may be a little too favourable. The reviewer obviously sympathises strongly both with the men he commands, and the system they obey. But the sketch none the less proves its own truthfulness by its minuteness of detail, and its author has accomplished at least one feat—he has explained why the Madras Army—we speak of the Infantry line—remained faithful, and is likely to remain so.

An organization more opposed to European ideas of military discipline it is difficult to conceive. Every one knew as a fact, of course, that the Madras sepoy carried his household with him; but the effect of that arrangement, the boundless influence it exercises on the daily life of the soldier, can only be realised by a description minute and accurate as a photograph. The Madras regiment is, in fact, a clan engaged in British service, and encamped with all its women, children, baggage, and property around it. The single fact that a Madras sepoy accumulates his property in his hut, spends his income in the lines, instead of remitting it to a far-away village in Oude or Rohilcund, explains much. It is the wives, however, who exercise a direct restraining influence. A native, with his imagination fired by the prospect of infinite gain to be secured as soon as society is overturned, may throw his property to the winds. He will not throw his wife. A Madras regiment in mutiny must either remain stationary, awaiting the hour of retribution, a course no regiment ever takes, or leave the women behind to be, as they fancy, the victims of the European soldiery, and without pay, or lumber along the road helplessly encumbered. The risk is too great, and the sepoys themselves quote their wives as a final argument against the possibility of mutiny. Mutiny is an exceptional case, but the wives, it is asserted, exercise a direct influence in favour of daily discipline. They are often daughters of the regiment, always thoroughly acquainted with the regulations, hours of drill, and calls of duty. They cannot abide that their husbands should expose themselves to punishment, and as their tongues are as long as those of all Asiatic women, or, for that matter, of all women unrestrained by civilisation, the unlucky sepoy fears the curtain lecture at least as much as the reprimand of the orderly room. A pensioner's wife expressed her notion on the point in the following very intelligible terms. Her husband, we must premise, was a pensioner just turned out of the lines for misconduct:—

"I, too, am a servant of Government, my father was a soldier. My husband served thirty-two years, and I have given my two sons to the same flag. Do you suppose if I had been here, this old fool (pointing to her husband) could have misbehaved himself in this way? Do you think I do not know the regulations of the service? I, too, am a child of the regiment; I was born, brought up, and married under your flag; and under your flag I will die. You have turned me out among a strange people, and I have been so for months now. Let me come back. I will swear below the colours of the regiment that no fault of this kind will occur again. If it does, shoot me with musketry or blow me away from a gun!"

With the wife come a troop of relatives, and the Madras soldier, wherever he may be when not on service, is at home in his lines.

Another institution, not by any means so widely known, is that of recruit boys. The son of any native soldier, within the limit of seventy per regiment, may be entertained as a recruit or pension boy. In practice they are entertained as babies, and are taught to salute on parade as soon as they can walk. At fourteen they are regularly paid, and at sixteen are drafted into the ranks, where they have some special privileges. So certain, indeed, is their promotion, owing to the education Government provides and enforces, that in one regiment, out of twenty native commissioned officers, ten were recruit boys, while of the havildars, they had four times their fair proportion. The benefit of this institution to the soldier is extreme. It enables him to keep his son under his own eye, without burdening himself, a privilege the force of which only those who know Asiatics can understand. An English father prefers that his fledglings should quit the nest and build for themselves. A Hindoo father looks on any migration of the kind as the greatest of misfortunes, and will coolly encounter comparative poverty to avoid it.

With the old organization of the Bengal army the introduction of either of these systems was impossible. Hindostanee wives will not emigrate, and the sepoy served anywhere from Thyatmyoo to Saugor. The sons, therefore, stayed at home to be inoculated with village prejudices, left uneducated, and brought at last into the regiment as most loutish specimens of humanity. But should the plan advocated by the Lahore committee be adopted, and all native forces be employed within a short distance of their homes, the separation of families would cease to be imperative. The Hindostanee wife who will not go to a "foreign" country, will and does travel over the division. Indeed, we are not certain whether—sea service apart—the prejudice is wholly insuperable for longer distances. The Hyderabad Contingent, for example, all Hindostanees, are accompanied by their families. It seems certain that no arrangement could paralyze sepoys so completely for sudden and murderous emeutes, and it is the rapidity and secrecy rather than the power of the native soldiery which make them formidable mutineers.

It is worthy of notice that the combination of castes and races recommended by most of the officers who have written on reorganization is partially secured in Madras. In the regiment described there are:—Native Christians, 69; Mussulmans, 305; Hindostanees, 34; Mahrattas, 15; Telingas, 517; Tamul, 129; other low castes, 80; Indo-Britons, 18; total, 1,167. For ourselves we have no belief in these divisions; the bond of military brotherhood, and the subserviency of all Hindoo castes to the Bramhun, soon destroy the centrifugal force of differences either of caste or creed. But the fact is still one to be honestly recorded on the side of the officers who have defended that view. It is, however, in the powerlessness for sudden emeutes produced by the presence of their families, and the contentment caused by the presence of their children, that we look for the sources of the fidelity of the Madras sepoy.—Friend of India.

TODA SACRIFICES.—A Madras contemporary gives a description of the obsequies of a Toda chief, from the work of Captain Harkness on the Nilgarras, which will be read with interest:—"The cemetery and place of funeral sacrifice was a pretty green spot, partially enclosed by a stone wall, and rendered very gloomy by a thick wood on one side, and lofty hills on the other. A strongly-walled area was set apart for the reception of the buffaloes, and was strewed with bones and horns. The funeral procession entered the green, and moved towards the centre. The deceased was dressed in a new garment and mantle, and arrayed in all the ornaments he had worn during life. He was carried on a bier formed of branches and herbs, and followed by a number of mourners, male and female, who chanted the lament, whilst others carried wood for the funeral pile, and provisions for the evening meal. The herd of buffaloes was driven into the walled area; whilst some twelve or fifteen Kotas, who are accustomed to give from four to eight annas for the carcasses, sat on the hill which overlooked the valley, and looked like harpies waiting the moment whereon to gorge themselves with their destined prey. At last preparations were made for the approaching sacrifice. The men armed with clubs entered the area with exulting shouts, and performed a wild dance amongst the buffaloes. The fury of the animals was soon excited to the highest pitch, and then a signal was given to commence the attack and attach a bell to the neck of each buffalo. The infuriated animals, who are monsters in comparison with those in the plains, proved to be most formidable adversaries. No stratagem was adopted, but two young men would throw themselves upon the neck of an animal, seize it by the horns, and twisting their bodies behind the beast, would support themselves with one hand, while with the forefinger and thumb of the other they seized the cartilage of the nostrils. Others would run to their assistance, and eight or nine men would be seen hanging on the neck of one animal, whilst others were endeavouring to increase its rage by striking it with clubs, and goading it on with hideous yells and gestures. Three or four animals were thus attacked at one time, and the bell attached to the neck of each. But meantime the general assemblage who lined the walls were weeping, exulting, or sending forth shrieks of horror, whenever a man was wounded, a buffalo overpowered, or a lover or a husband in imminent danger. On the next day the victims were finally sacrificed. The men struck the animal behind the horns with a wood-cutter's axe. Sometimes the first blow sufficed, and the infuriated animal fell to the ground. Sometimes a large animal escaped from the blow and drove madly amongst the multitude. Several wild dances followed, during which, like the priests of Baal, the men feigned to cut and lacerate themselves. The funeral ceremonies appear to have been brought to an end on the third day by the burning of the deceased chief on the funeral pile."

WAYSIDE PREACHING IN MALABAR.—A fisherman excused himself by saying that a barren cocoanut-tree in the midst of fertile ones had just cause to complain of God, who had not predisposed it to bear fruit. A Tier refused to believe because a plant growing on a dunghill must needs wither if pulled out and transplanted. Alluding to recent relapses among the Christians, he said, "No one eats rice upon which dust and dirt have fallen." Another replied, "That it was no concern of the missionaries if they went to hell, as he would not help them out of it." An old woman thought that since she had so great hardships upon earth, and the missionary was so well off, it was but just that he should be sent to hell, and she received into heaven. A Nair said, "That the Europeans were the adversaries of the poor natives, because the latter had to bathe whenever they came in contact with the former." Another replied, "We have no time to think of God or to pray: we have to gain our bread." A third observed, "I am obliged to work hard for the support of my family; this is sufficient equivalent for my sins." A fourth remarked, "The padre's words are true; but if we follow him, he sends us away again for any little sin." A fifth promised to become Christian when he had no longer need to work. A sixth asked whether he would gain a lawsuit by offering a small piece of money to our God. A seventh maintained that God had instituted idols, and that Christians must needs have impure hearts, because they feed on cows' flesh, while the Nair's heart is pure. An eighth stated that everything comes from God, therefore sin also; and that it was foolishness for a man not to die in the same caste in which he was born. A ninth endeavoured to prove that he was god, because the five elements—earth, water, fire, air, and æther, were to be found in him as well as in God, and that man could change any thing into god by his will. A youth was asked what God he worshipped. He turned round, and pointing to a boy near him, said, "When dead I shall be his god!" A police-ameen excused himself, that religion would not do for him, as it was impossible to attend to the duties of a public office without sinning. He said, "Government servants have no time for the Bible. It is true, our shastras are of no use; but then we possess the knowledge of Brahma in order to be saved." Another hearer thought that Vishnu was quite powerful enough to help him to heaven. The missionary alluded to the crimes attributed to him. He replied, "What matters this? He and his like have the privilege to do such things." A Tahsildar, many years ago moonshee of the brethren at Mangalore, stated as his opinion that indeed every man ought to serve God with all his heart and put his confidence in Him. "But," he went on, "the Europeans are the chief sinners. It is they who live in adultery, lie, and deceive; and the natives have learned such sins from them. It would be well if a Brahman were to travel about, and preach to the Europeans not to do such things, but to worship their Creator. We have no objection to live according to the Bible, as far as it does not interfere with our customs. But Christ is not wanted. He has ascended into heaven in the same manner as Tuka Rama of Pandarapura was taken up into heaven two hundred and fifty years ago, for the sake of his piety. You say that Christ has sent you to preach the Gospel many centuries ago. It is but a few years that some Germans have arrived in this country, and now at last one has also come to these parts." Some paniers (slaves) were asked whether they would not worship God. Instantly they cast themselves in the dust and stretched forth their hands towards the missionary. When they were told that God was in heaven, they looked up to heaven. They were quite overwhelmed with fear at the sight of a European, so much so, that their hearts throbbed visibly.

THE MURDER OF CAPTAIN LEYCESTER.—We have great satisfaction in being able to state that the conviction of the murderers of the late Captain Leycester (for they are two if not three) is now certain; and as the facts are known to all of us here, we can commit no indiscretion in removing the anxiety of his friends at a distance by declaring them. Murad Khan, the office peon, (who was, however, always employed domestically at the house,) and Swamy the bearer who shampooed him to sleep, and Raguvolu, the other office peon, are all implicated, the first did the deed, the second held the light while the murderer fired, and the last is suspected of having been accessory after, if not before the fact. Swamy has confessed his share in the horrible affair. He stated that Murad Khan spoke to him after he had left his master's room at nine o'clock that night, and said, "I shall shoot that fellow, and if you tell I'll shoot you." They then went together to their master's desk, took out a small box of studs (two or three sets) and went and buried them in the garden walk, which was built of loose stones. They had the small lantern with them, and by its light they returned to the house at the back verandah, the end of which is cut off, forming an anteroom to the bed-room; there Swamy staid holding the light while Murad Khan opened the door of the bed-room, towards which was the head of the bed, without curtains—so that the victim could not see anything proceeding from that quarter. His head was without a covering, the top of the skull just visible above the rail, and about four feet only from the door. Standing at the door the muzzle of the gun would be within a foot of the poor gen-

BOMBAY.

COTTON MANUFACTORIES.

Few men are better able to deal with the question of cotton culture in India than Dr. Royle, the well-known Indian botanist. Long resident in this country, officially connected with the cotton experiments lately instituted, and evidently qualified by educational pursuits, bent of mind, and education, to investigate such a subject, Dr. Royle's opinions are of sufficient importance to demand attention. He expresses, we see, his firm belief that no real progress will be made in the culture of cotton in India until the manufacturers and merchants of England shall send out European agents to reside permanently in the tracts in which the plant may be raised with success. The settlement of Europeans or their agents in the cotton districts, with the express purpose of encouraging the natives to improve the cultivation of their own, or to grow the American cotton, is the measure which has been recommended as the one thing essential for the extension and improvement of this great staple. As the trade has been described to be profitable, it indeed appears remarkable that no planters should have established themselves for an object which is considered of such importance by the manufacturers of Lancashire.

The fact that very little interest has hitherto been taken in the manufacture of cotton is one of the reasons that have prevented the employment of European enterprise in the field offered by this country. There are hopeful signs, however, for the future. Two cotton mills have been in operation here for some time, and a third has been in contemplation since 1857. It was said six months ago that the last, which belongs to the East India Company, had ordered machinery from England, the selection of which was left to the managing director; but owing, we fancy, to some disagreement as to the terms proposed by him for undertaking the work, no steps have yet been taken to effect this object. The company, we believe, are besides deficient in funds, and thus the completion of the works, which have been commenced, has been put off for the present. It is to be hoped, however, that there is no cessation of interest on the subject; for if the Company will carry out their scheme they will find it has advantages in its favour which fully guarantee its success. The Cowasjee Nanabhoy Company is earning at the rate of thirty or forty per cent., the mills turning out 2,500lbs. of cotton twist daily, and this is but an index of what may be expected from a mill more advantageously situated. Land is cheap at Callian, labour easily procured, good water found in abundance, and the station is at the junction of the Berar and Jubbulpore lines of railway, by means of which the transport of cotton from the Deccan and the North-West Provinces will be cheaply and conveniently effected, and the twist from the manufactory expeditiously sent to the interior.

European manufacturers in this country have a vast field of usefulness before them. Their establishment in the different districts interested in the improvement of the cotton of India is all that is required greatly to extend and improve the culture and commerce of all kinds in the country. Then we may expect that the condition of the people will also be materially improved. There will be a fall in the cost of all the articles of comfort and clothing required by the working classes; and this alone will be in its effects equivalent to a social change of the most important kind. In England the manufacturing interest has lately made great progress. Our hardware is the very beau ideal of what iron should be, and our Manchester goods are the best that can be had for the money all the world over. The great improvement in these arts has not been without its influence on the condition of the people, inasmuch as the real or commodity price of their labour is a great deal better than it was a few years ago. The marvels and triumphs of the last fifty years would have been impossible but for the steam engine, the loom, and the spinning jenny.

Sidney Smith had a semi-serious glimpse of this truth when he averred that the modern destiny of the British people was, mainly, the weaving of calico. In plain earnest, from this vulgar-looking process came the power that humbled Napoleon. Since his fall it has founded colonies, changed the face of politics, and given new laws to commerce. The loom and its appliances will be found at the root of most of the reforms that have been pressed on the Government of England—and few reforms, we know, have ever been obtained except by some outward pressure.

In India we want professional men of experience and ability to superintend manufactories; every other circumstance is favourable to their success. Cowasjee Nanabhoy, in establishing the first cotton manufactory in Tardeo, and by his perseverance ensuring success to the experiment, has shown a degree of energy and enterprise which is rare among his own countrymen. His shares are now at about fifty per cent. premium. He gave twelve per cent. last year, when his mill was only working partially. This year a much higher dividend will be expected—say twenty-five or thirty per cent.—Bombay Gazette.

A NATIVE DESPATCH.—The following apocryphal document purports to be the official Wagher despatch reporting our defeat (!) at Beyt, and is supposed to have been dropped during the nocturnal retreat of the enemy. It is apparently written by the successor of the lamented Venyak Bowrao, whose remains were in course of sublimation when our troops entered the forsaken fortress. The original is in a mongrel Kutchie-Guzerati, with which the translator has done his best. A family likeness to the despatches of John Chinaman is traceable. "From Strykemilukki Bamboojee, commandant at Beyt fort and garrison, to the sublime Jacob Manik, Governor-general of Okamendel, Ram Ram! By the blessings of the unsearchable and ineffable genius that presides over the destinies of your unconquerable race, it is the privilege of your unworthy slave to be able to report a complete victory over the naval and military forces of the English Government. Fate had decreed that the valiant-in-fight Venyak Bowrao, whom your excellency had placed over the affairs of Beyt, should not survive the glorious victory which your foresight and wisdom, and his valour, have secured to us. Just at the moment when our success was all but complete, an unfortunate accident terminated his brilliant career, and removed him to the bosom of the god with fifty heads and one hundred horns. The preliminaries of the siege have already been reported to your sublimity by our departed bahi, and now it only remains for me to bring to your notice the concluding transactions, and the merits of the various persons engaged in the successful affair. The English opened the guns of their fireboats upon us, but, as very few of their shot and shell came near us, we did not respond, and so we led them on to their destruction. We carefully reserved our fire till they were deluded into landing, and were actually marching blindfold by inexorable fate up to the very foot of our walls. Our friend and protector, the god with the 100 horns, spread his shield over your slaves, and blew the dust of delusion into the eyes of your enemies. In this state of blind infatuation the English army attempted to scale our walls, which laughed at all their foolish efforts. At our leisure we shot down the sahib logue in all directions. Soldier and sepoy logue fell before our fire like stalks of rice before the reapers. In fine, our success was complete. Of the enemy, we have every reason to believe that we killed and wounded nearly the whole, while on our side, including the irreparable loss of our victorious leader, we only lost three men killed and five slightly wounded. When we had so far succeeded, we carried out the original and admirable plan formed by the wisdom of your Excellency. After disabling the greater part of the enemy, we kept the remnant in play till the grateful shades of evening protectingly enwrapped us and enshrouded your enemies in darkness, surpassed in intensity only by their confusion and bewilderment. Agreeably to your wise instructions, we evacuated the fort unknown to the enemy, and successfully removed everything of any use or value. We merely left behind us the property of the holy temples, which, doubtless, the gods will carefully protect. They protected us, and now they are left free and unfettered to take care of themselves. Should, unfortunately, the wicked rudeness of the sahib logue overcome the power of the gods, the burra sahib at Bombay will certainly see justice done. In a few days we will join the forces of your highness at Dwarka, and (with the blessing of the cow with the three calves) we will exterminate the Bombay army on the banks of the Goomtee, as the King of Delhi did the Bengal army on the plains of Delhi. I append lists of the sirdars and others who greatly distinguished themselves on this occasion. Those in list A (especially my aide-de-camp, Ram Takasite) I recommend for the distinguished decoration of the "bull with the crooked horns." Their gallantry and devotion to the cause deserve this high recognition. The devotion and gallantry of those in list B merits promotion with increase of pay. For gallantry, but without marked devotion, and for devotion without much gallantry, those in lists C and D respectively should be remunerated with an allowance of the best butter—well known to be admirably adapted to such cases. With the profoundest admiration and respect, I remain your excellency's humble and devoted slave,—STRYKEMILUKKI BAMBOOJEE, acting commandant of Beyt garrison."

BREVET-MAJOR F. S. VACHER, of the 38rd (Duke of Wellington's) Regiment, has been appointed Commandant of the Recruit Depot at Bombay, to be formed from the 1st November, 1859. Major Vacher served with the 89rd Regiment in the Crimean campaign of 1854 until November of that year, when he was appointed Assistant Engineer to the right attack, and served in the trenches before Sebastopol until February, 1855. He was then transferred to the General Staff, and held the appointment of Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-general at head-quarters during the remainder of the war. He received a medal and three clasps, and the 5th class of the Medjidie, for his services in the Crimea. He was also promoted to Brevet Major, and nominated Knight of the Legion of Honour.

SIR BARTLE FRERE, K.C.B., late Commissioner in Sind, arrived at Bombay on the 2nd Nov. by H.M.'s steamer Victoria, on his way to Calcutta, to join the Supreme Council. He has taken up his quarters with his brother, W. E. Frere, Esq., Sudder Judge, at his residence "Altamont."

A NEW MERCANTILE FIRM.—We hear that Mr. T. Bromley, bill broker, and Mr. F. Clough, partner in the firm of Messrs. Brown, Clough, and Co., are about to open a new mercantile house, under the style of Bromley and Clough.

LIEUTENANT PARSONS, Deputy-Assistant Commissary of Ordnance, has been appointed to act as Deputy Commissary of Ordnance at Hyderabad. Captain Mellersh, on making over charge to Lieutenant Parsons, will proceed to Kurrachee to relieve Captain Kinloch, who will leave for Bombay by the first opportunity, to join the appointment to which he has been nominated.

DESECRATION OF HINDOO TEMPLES.—Great excitement seems to prevail among the Bhatias and Banians of Bombay, consequent on the alleged desecration of their great temple Krishna at Dwarka, by the British troops, and the former have recently carried into execution the determination made by the heads of their respective castes at a meeting recently held in the Mandosee street, not to illuminate their shops and houses in commemoration of the Dewallee festival. They have circulated reports not only that their gods have been looted, but that 300 Poojagurs or priests attached to the temple have been ruthlessly slaughtered by our soldiers. There is of course a great deal of exaggeration in these reports. Government have endeavoured to re-assure the natives of Bombay, by informing them that instructions have been sent to the officer commanding the forces in Okhamundel that the temples at Beyt and Dwarka are to be respected, and that such idols as may be removed from them should be restored. "The Madras Athenæum, however, gives a distinct contradiction to these rumours:—"It seems, after all, that the idols in the temple at Beyt have not been destroyed. Colonel Donovan, the late commander of the Okhamundel Field Force, has written a letter to Lord Elphinstone, in which he explains what took place after the fort was occupied." This letter the Bombay papers have summarised as follows:—"Referring to a plan of the fortress, which accompanies this letter, showing its strong casemated, loop-holed arrangements, with the relative position of its temples, Colonel Donovan observes that it will explain better than he can describe, that the fort defences could not have been destroyed without serious injury to the temples. Seeing that this was unavoidable, that officer took prompt measures for the preservation of idols, the gold and silver ornaments, and other valuables belonging to the temples. The idols he had at once made over to the priests; but as he could not determine who were the proper parties to receive the jewellery and valuables, he had them conveyed on board the Feroze for better security. These precautions were all the more necessary, as the European soldiery, who could alone have prevented the excesses of the natives of Beyt and camp-followers, which would assuredly have attended the destruction of the fort, had been sent back to the shipping to avoid exposing them to a similar temptation. Some ornaments of trifling value, Colonel Donovan regrets to state, were appropriated by the men of the force before order had been restored after the occupation of the fort; but he trusts that when the Hindoos are made aware that their idols are safe, that enough treasure has been preserved to enrich any temples which they may hereafter erect; and that their enemies, the Waghers, will not be in a position to molest them again, they will feel that they have received all the consideration which, under the circumstances, was possible. He did all in his power to preserve and respect property, and permitted no one to approach the temples outside the fort. One of these had been plundered by the Waghers before they retreated, but none were disturbed, by the men of his force. In conclusion, he observes that if the Hindoos will convert fortified castles into places of worship, and then surround them by strong fortresses close up to their very walls, and out of which they can neither keep their own nor our enemies, they must expect to find that their temples cannot be preserved inviolate."

PUTTORA FAIR.—Sir Bartle Frere has sent to the Bombay Government an official account of the annual fair of Puttura in Sind, held half way between Meerpore and Omerkote in honour of Puttura, the Moorshid of the Sodas, Rajpoots, and Meywars. The Meywars go from Marwar and Cutch in large numbers with their families to be present. The fair was this year attended by 11,000 persons, and 187 shops were opened for the sale of goods, a larger number than on any former occasion.

CHINA.

HONG KONG, Oct. 29.—The London mail of the 10th of September arrived here on the 23rd instant.

Exchange on London has advanced to 4s. 9½d. for bank bills at six months' sight, and 4s. 10d. for good private bills. Exchange at Shanghai was at 6s. 7½d. Freights are still dull. The prices offered for imports at Canton have risen, and though little has been doing at Shanghai prices have not fallen.

Everything remains dull. A portion of the 67th regiment has come up here from Calcutta, and the 3rd Buffs are daily expected from the same place, it having been supposed that Shanghai was in danger at the time of the riot there. It is said that a recent survey of the mouth of the Peiho has disclosed that large vessels can move in very close to the forts, so if directions come out for the destruction of the forts, there will be no difficulty in doing so. A number of vessels are engaged at Calcutta lest hostilities should be ordered, but we are not without hope that moderate counsels will prevail.

Mr. Lay has commenced the operation of the new Customs Service at Canton. As might be expected, an innovation of this kind has been sharply opposed by a portion of the foreign community, but in some quarters in such an abusive way as rather to close than to promote discussion. One important fact, however, is that the United States Consul at Canton has refused his sanction to the arrangement until he communicates with his Excellency Mr. Ward; and the American steamer, White Cloud, brought back a portion of its cargo immediately after the regulations were put in force this week, rather than bear the delay involved by the Customs examination. As the system appears not to have worked ill at Shanghai, it is to be hoped that some attempt will be made to suit the necessities of the river steamers.

We mentioned in our last Overland Summary that "the southern portion" of the island of Saghalien had been ceded to the Russians by the Japanese Government. As the Russians held the northern portion some time ago, it may be presumed that the whole island is now in their hands.

The wreck of another steamer has to be announced by us every mail almost regularly. This time it is the James Hartley the loss of which we have to record. It left Shanghai for Hong Kong on the 6th instant, and on the evening of the 10th, a little after six o'clock, struck upon some rocks about eighty miles distant from Hong Kong. After incurring great danger the officers and crew were taken down to Hong Kong by a junk. Twenty-five thousand dollars which were on board were afterwards recovered by a gunboat. The ship Inkermann, from London, has been lost on St. John's island; the Louisa Bailie, on its way to Swatow; and the schooner Minnita, on the other side of this island.

Early on the morning of the 19th instant a destructive fire broke out here, which destroyed the establishments of Mr. Marsh, Mrs. Rickomartz, the Victoria Exchange, the billiard room of the Commercial Hotel, and a newly built Roman Catholic chapel, with an adjacent house. The damage is estimated at upwards of 100,000 dollars.—Overland China Mail.

THE POPULATION OF CHINA.—Formerly the population of the entire globe used to be estimated at about seven hundred millions, and the population of China, with its three or four hundred millions, looked so disproportionately large that it was supposed its census could not be relied on, and the number of its inhabitants had been exaggerated. Balbi's estimate in 1844, 737 hundred millions, and only 390 millions for Asia, has been generally accepted till lately; but within the last three or four years the population of the world has been frequently set down at 1,000 millions. The latest estimate on this subject we have seen is one made by Herr Dietrich, the director of the Statistical Bureau of Berlin, who sets down the entire population at 1,268 millions, under the following heads:—Australia, 2,000,000; America, 59,000,000; Africa, 200,000,000; Europe, 272,000,000; Asia, 755,000,000: total, 1,268 millions. The population of Asia is thus subdivided, in round numbers:—Beloochistan, 2,000,000; Afghanistan, 4,000,000; Arabia, 5,000,000; Siberia, 7,000,000; Bokhara, &c., 8,000,000; Persia, 13,000,000; Turkey, &c., 15,000,000; Trans-India, 15,000,000; Japan, 35,000,000; Indian Archipelago, 80,000,000; India, 171,000,000; China, 400,000,000: total, 755,000,000. The last census of China gave 414,886,994; and the more we learn of the Chinese empire, the less reason does there appear to think that the number of its enormous population has been exaggerated by its native authorities. From the Arbeiten der Russischen Gesandtschaft zu Peking über China, it appears that the population of the empire has been steadily increasing. In 1757 the census gave only 190,348,328; in 1780 it gave 277,548,431; in 1812 there were 361,693,179; and in 1841, the second last census accessible, 413,457,311.

CEYLON.

COLOMBO, Nov. 15.—The effects of the late ripening of the crops are apparent in the fact that only two vessels have cleared with coffee during the past fortnight. They have taken away 9,647 cwts. of our staple, in the proportions of 5,068 plantation and 4,559 native. The cargo of the Trent, which clears for London to-day, is not included in the statement. The total exports from 1st October to 12th November are 39,458, a quantity considerably in excess of those shown for the corresponding periods of the previous three years. The fine weather in the early part of the season facilitated the carriage preparation and shipment of what coffee was gathered. In most of the coffee districts the weather is now all that could be wished for ripening the crop, which, provided it can be saved, will be the largest ever gathered in Ceylon. Not that there is not some light coffee, and also shorter crops than were expected in some of the older districts, but over the whole breadth of cultivation the yield is good. The great and pressing want is that of labourers to gather in the harvest.

It becomes our melancholy duty, on this occasion, to announce the death of the chief justice of Ceylon, Sir W. C. Rowe, who expired at Galle on the 10th instant. His loss is greatly regretted, as that of an eminently honest and industrious judge, who showed anxiety in every possible way to promote the welfare of the people amongst whom he dwelt. Much sympathy is felt for Lady Rowe in connection with this sad and sudden bereavement.

Consequent on this casualty Mr. Justice Sterling has become acting chief justice. It is not probable that a third judge will be appointed until the views of the Home Government are ascertained. If Mr. Sterling is confirmed as chief justice, or if Mr. Temple is fortunate enough to obtain the appointment, there can be little doubt that Mr. Morgan will be confirmed as puisne justice.—Overland Observer.

THE STRAITS.

SARAWAK.—Last accounts from Sarawak state that the Datu Patingi Gapur had been detected in attempting to stir the Dyaks up to rebellion and to massacre the Europeans. This Datu is an old offender in this way. He was banished from Sarawak for his intrigues against the Government, and proceeded on a pilgrimage to Mecca, in 1854. On his return he was imprudently permitted again to proceed to Sarawak, and it would appear the old disposition has again shown itself. The Dyaks, with whom he endeavoured to tamper, communicated what he was about to the authorities, and he was arrested. It is a pity that such an inveterate intriguer could not be effectually silenced; but we suppose the Sarawak Government hesitate to proceed to extremities with a man of the Datu Patingi's position, whose influence, moreover, must have been considerably augmented by the sanctity resulting from his pilgrimage to the holy places.

CENTRAL ASIA.

Aug. 1.—The Ameer and all his chiefs and Sirdars attended the wedding of Hufeezolla Khan, son of Sirdar Sultan Mahomed Khan, who was betrothed to the daughter of Sirdar Peer Mahomed Khan.—Sirdar Wully Mahomed Khan despatched thirty loads of cartridges and powder, and several loads of sugar, cloth, &c., to Ukhcha for his brother, Sirdar Fyz Mahomed Khan. The Ameer consulted with his chiefs, regarding the division of his territory between his sons and grandsons, to prevent disputes among them after his death.—Aug. 2.—The Ameer sent for Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan, and told him that he wished to divide his country between all his sons during his life. The territory of Turkistan, from Balkh to Kotul, Hindoo Koosh, and the River Homoo, which has been recently conquered, he gave to Sirdars Mahomed Afzul Khan and Mahomed Azeem Khan. The country of Ukhcha to Sirdar Wully Mahomed Khan, and other Sirdars who are with Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan. The territory of Candahar to Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan, and his brother Sirdar Mahomed Shereef Khan. The Furreh territory to Sirdar Futteh Mahomed Khan, son of the late Wuzeer Mahomed Ukbar Khan. The territory of Cabul, Ghuzni and Jellalabad to Sirdar Peer Ally Khan. The remaining hill territories of Zurmut, Kurrum, and Lohokur, will be considered hereafter. The Ameer then ordered Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan to proceed immediately to Candahar and relieve Sirdar Shere Ally Khan, who will come to Cabul.—Aug. 3.—A petition from Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan was received, stating that Meer Yousuf Ally Khan, brother of the ruler of Budukhsan, has presented four male and six female slaves, and says that if 8,000 sowars were given him, he would gain the rule of Budukhsan for the Ameer; and that he (Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan) has informed Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan of the same, who has written in reply that when Meer Yousuf Ally Khan has conquered Budukhsan it shall be placed under his rule. After receiving a khillut of a sword and a horse, Meer Yousuf Ally Khan has been permitted to proceed to Budukhsan with 3,000 sowars. The Ameer ordered that the new regiment which had been enlisted for Sirdar Mahomed Hussein Khan be discharged. Sirdar Mahomed Hossein Khan wrote to his brother, Sirdar Mahomed Usleem Khan, and informed him of the Ameer's order; he gave two rupees to each man of the regiment, and told them to wait his brother's answer.—Aug. 4.—The Ameer ordered Sirdar Mahomed Shereef Khan to station his regiment in the cantonments of Bala Hissar, and himself to accompany Sirdar Mahomed Survir Khan, son of Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan, to Zoomut, and thence to Chandahar. The Ameer then reviewed Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan's regiment.—Aug. 6.—An urzee was received from Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan, stating that a rumour was current that the Ruler of Koolab had sent an elchee to Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan. Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan also begged the Ameer will be pleased to send his two sons, Sirdar Mahomed Ishak Khan and Mahomed Uzeez Khan, with one Ressalla to Koondooz.—Aug. 7.—The Ameer summoned Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan, and after bestowing a khillut and two horses, permitted him to proceed at once to Candahar. The Sirdar, with one hundred sowars, immediately marched off, and is encamped at Chundeh, where he will remain four or five days.—Aug. 9.—Nadir Khan, Birwanee, and Soofee Khan, Payanee, arrived in Cabul from Koondooz and went to pay their respects to the Ameer, who was very angry with them for leaving Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan alone in Koondooz. Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan having heard of this, sent for them at Chardah and consoled them.—Aug. 10.—News from Chandahar arrived stating that a paper from Sirdar Sultan Ahmed Khan, ruler of Heerat, had been received, representing that prince Humza Mirza, with 50,000 men, had arrived from Teheran and entered Mushed, and that he had written to the Prince that he had no treasure with him, otherwise he would soon join the Prince. The Prince has sent 7,000 Boodkees, but he has no intention of joining the Prince. The Ameer was much pleased, and said that he would soon take Heerat. The Ameer then sent a message to Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan, requesting him to make no delay in proceeding immediately to Candahar. A kossid from Turkistan arrived, and represented that it was rumoured in Balkh that the Persian forces had reached Mumnea. He also stated that the King of Balkh had betrothed his daughter to Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan.—Lahore Chronicle.

Claims to Compensation.

Financial Dept., Fort William, Oct. 29.—The following resolution is published for general information:—

Read the undermentioned papers on the subject of the claims preferred to compensation for losses of property and effects sustained during the recent mutiny:—

Financial despatch from H.M.'s Secretary of State for India, No. 74, dated 11th August, 1859.

Letters from this department, dated 24th September, 1859, to the Governments of Bengal, the North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab, the Chief Commissioner of Oude, and the agents to the Governor-General in Rajpootana and Central India, respectively.

Letters from the Government of the North-Western Provinces, dated 1st October, 1859, and to ditto in reply, No. 8,415, dated 7th idem.

Letter from the Government of Bengal, No. 5,853, dated Sept. 30, 1859.

Letter from the Chief Commissioner of Oude, dated Oct. 7, 1859.

Letter from the Government of the Punjab, dated Oct. 12, 1859.

Letter from the Agent to the Governor general in Central India, dated Oct. 12, 1859.

Letter from the Agent to the Governor-general, Rajpootana States, dated Oct. 21, 1859.

1. I have received and considered in Council your despatches in this department, dated April 23 last, Nos. 58 and 59, together with the papers which accompanied them, on subject of the claims preferred to compensation for losses of property and effects sustained during the recent mutiny.

2. In Lord Stanley's financial despatch, dated the 28th October last, No. 17, noticing memorial from certain sufferers by the mutiny, it was observed that the appointment of a committee of investigation was in itself evidence of an intention to entertain claims to compensation, so far as might be consistent with the interests of the State. It is not therefore necessary to discuss the question of granting some compensation to those who have sustained losses, nor are H.M.'s Government disposed to make any distinction between losses sustained by Europeans, whether servants of the State or otherwise, and by natives of India whose active loyalty during the disturbances can be clearly established.

3. Her Majesty's Government cannot admit that there is any ground for the claims put forward by firms or individuals for losses of profits which, but for the mutiny, might have been realised, or by insurance offices for loss of premiums through the death of persons whose lives had been assured.

4. The total amount of claims for loss during the Indian mutiny, in support of which, so far as can be ascertained from the papers forwarded by you, prima facie evidence has been laid before the Commissioners, is Rs. 2,07,83,214, while further claims amounting to Rs. 32,67,783 are doubtful, or require the production of further evidence. Of the former amount the sum of Rs. 9,25,493 represents the value of plate, jewellery, &c. The claims of insurance companies on account of loss of lives assured by them amount to Rs. 4,13,821, independently of the further claims on the same account which were forwarded with your letter, No. 59.

5. After full consideration of the subject, her Majesty's Government are of opinion that in granting compensation a distinction should be made between losses on buildings, factories, or crops, and losses of cash, jewels, and articles of personalty. They have accordingly determined that in regard to the former, when the amount of the admitted loss shall not exceed Rs. 2,000, compensation to the extent of one-half shall be awarded, and in cases where the admitted loss shall exceed Rs. 2,000, compensation shall be awarded to the extent of Rs. 1,000, and one-third of the sum by which the loss shall exceed Rs. 2,000. In regard to cash, jewels, and articles of personalty, they consider it proper to limit the compensation to one-third of the admitted loss, in no case granting a larger amount than Rs. 5,000.

6. It remains to decide in what way the amount required to meet the claims shall be provided, and when and in what form it shall be disbursed.

7. Her Majesty's Government agree with your lordship that it would not be advisable that fines should be imposed on the rebellious districts for the purpose of providing the necessary funds for this object.

8. In the present condition of the finances of India, any additional charge upon the revenues is necessarily most inconvenient, and her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the amount to be granted must be limited by that consideration. They are anxious to meet, as promptly as may be practicable, the claims of the numerous sufferers, and they have therefore decided that the compensation awarded shall be paid out of the general revenue of the State, and be disbursed in cash in India at the earliest practicable period.

9. According to the information at present before me, and as far as I am able to form an estimate from the statements forwarded, the amount which will have to be provided as compensation under the principle laid down in this despatch, will not exceed Rs. 80,00,000; but her Majesty's Government desire that it should be distinctly understood that, whatever may be the amount of losses substantiated, no larger sum than Rs. 1,00,00,000 can be granted for payment of compensation, and that in the event of this sum being insufficient to satisfy the claims established on the foregoing principles, a pro rata reduction must be made. I shall be prepared to remit to you the requisite sum in the course of the ensuing winter.

Resolution. — The Honourable the President in Council is pleased to direct that paragraphs 1 to 9 of the above-mentioned despatch from her Majesty's Secretary of State for India be published in the Official Gazette of Calcutta, the North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab, for general information.

2. The Governments of Bengal, the North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab, the Chief Commissioner of Oude, and the Governor-general's agents in Rajpootana and Central India will appoint one or more well-qualified officers, as noted in the margin,* under the designation of Compensation Commissioners, for the purpose of conducting such further enquiries as may be deemed necessary into the claims which have been registered, and for disposing of the same.

3. The decision of the Compensation Commissioners as to the amount of claim made good shall be final, and it is determined that the enquiries shall be completed within four months from the 15th proximo.

* Bengal, one; North-Western Provinces, one or more; Punjab, ditto; Oude, one; Rajpootana, ditto; Central India, two.

4. In order that all parties may have a full opportunity of establishing their claims, his Honour in Council desires that, in addition to the issue of notifications on the part of the Compensation Commissioners, separate notices shall, if possible, be served on each registered claimant or his agent.

5. Strict proof must in every case be required that the losses incurred were really caused by the mutiny, and could not have been prevented by the exercise of common prudence on the part of those who sustained them.

6. As regards the claims of natives whose active loyalty during the mutiny has not already been clearly established, full proof of the same shall be required by the Compensation Commissioners before an award is given in their favour.

7. Losses of merchandize and stock in trade will be classed with losses on buildings, factories, and crops.

8. In cases in which grants of money may have been made under the rules of the 13th November, 1857, (amended on the 21st July, 1858), for the grant of assistance to sufferers in consequence of the mutinies, the sums so granted will be taken into consideration in determining the amount of compensation to be awarded under this resolution.

9. When the inquiries of the Compensation Commissioners have been completed, an abstract statement of the results, showing the amount of claim made good in each case, will be forwarded to this department, when it will be determined, on an inspection of the whole of the abstract statements, whether the full proportion of the claims that may have been established on the principles laid down in the despatch of her Majesty's Secretary of State can be paid, or whether a pro rata reduction must be made.

10. Inquiries into claims will ordinarily be made by the commissioners themselves, but if in any case it should appear to them to be advisable that a local investigation should be instituted, they will be at liberty to cause such local investigation to be made through the collector of the district or other officers exercising the functions of a collector, on the distinct understanding that the results of such investigation must be reported to the Compensation Commissioners in time to enable them to complete their enquiries within the period mentioned in paragraph 3 of this resolution.

11. The date for the payment of the compensations which may be determined on, will be fixed on the receipt of the abstract statements above alluded to, and will not, it is fully expected, be later than two months from the date appointed for the closing of the investigations.

12. Where two or more Compensation Commissioners are appointed, it will be understood that they should act independently of each other and at different places, and not that they should form one united commission.

Ordered—Ordered that the above resolution be published in the Government Gazette, and that copies of the same be forwarded, with separate letters to the governments and officers noted in the margin,* for information and guidance.

By Order of the Honourable the President in Council,
C. HUGH LUSHINGTON,
Secretary to the Government of India.

Curtailment of Officers' Allowances.

No. 1,460.—The hon. the President in Council, with the concurrence of H. E. the Governor-General, is pleased to cancel the rule now in force at the three Presidencies, under which at all stations, not the headquarters of a permanent brigadier, where two regiments of the line may be cantoned, the officer exercising, in virtue of his seniority, the command of the station makes over the command of his own corps to the next senior regimental officer, and draws a command allowance of Rs. 500, with Rs. 20 for stationery.

* Government of Bengal; Government of North-Western Provinces; Government of Punjab; Chief Commissioner, Oude; Governor-general's Agent, Rajpootana; Governor-general's Agent, Central India.

In future the senior officer at all stations where there is no general officer or brigadier, or from whom the general officer or brigadier may be temporarily absent on duty within his division or district, will assume command of the station, retaining command of his own regiment; but he will have no title to an additional allowance for the command of the station.

The Honourable the President in Council is also pleased, with the concurrence of H. E., to direct that at the fixed stations where, in place of a brigadier major a station staff officer may be specially allowed a captain or experienced subaltern officer from one of the corps composing the garrison may be selected for the situation.

The allowance to be drawn by the officer so appointed will be, if the force consists of less than two regiments, rupees 60 per mensem, and if of more than two regiments, rupees 110 per mensem.

These allowances are consolidated, and include all expenses on account of writing and stationery.

At other stations where a station staff officer may be required and is authorised, the duties will be performed by one of the regimental staff officers, who will receive, if the force be less than two regiments, rupees 25 per mensem, including writing and stationery, and if more than two regiments, an allowance of rupees 60 per mensem.

In calculating the strength of garrisons and stations, irregular corps will be computed as well as corps of the line.

These orders are to be considered applicable to the three presidencies.

THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

Mr. JONES then rose to bring forward the resolution of which he had given notice, viz.:—

"That the principles of self-election and Government nomination, by which the Council of India is formed, give no security to the people of India for the redress of private and public wrongs, are opposed to the spirit of English institutions, and place the investments of British capitalists at the mercy of a secret and irresponsible authority."

The hon. proprietor began by observing that it was right the affairs of India should be subject to some supervision in this country. Parliament was unequal to the duty, both from want of knowledge and want of time.

Mr. CRAWFORD, M.P., rose to order, and asked whether there were present a sufficient number of members to constitute a Court.

The CHAIRMAN, having counted the Court, declared that there were not twenty members present, which number was required to form a quorum.

The Court accordingly adjourned.

THE WAR IN AFGHANISTAN.

Mr. CRAWFORD had given notice of the following motion:—

"That the thanks of the East India Company be given to Mr. Hadfield, Sir Henry Willoughby, Mr. H. Kennaird, Mr. Dunlop, Mr. Black, Mr. W. Ewart, and the other members of the House of Commons, to whose exertions it is due that the important evidence contained in the papers respecting the Afghan war, laid before Parliament last session, has been brought to light after a period of twenty years, during which every effort to obtain its production had failed."

The hon. proprietor had come prepared with voluminous documents, among which was the work of Carl Zimmermann, under the title of "The Theatre of War in Central Asia," with a view to show that the papers which were laid before Parliament in 1839 were so mutilated and altered as to bear a different meaning from that intended, and that the correspondence published in the Blue-book of last session showed the hostilities in Afghanistan to be unjust and illegal.

MADRAS MEDICAL SERVICE.—Following the example of the Bombay Commander-in-chief, Sir Charles Trevelyan has acknowledged in general orders "the meritorious conduct" of several medical subordinates while on service in the field during the late mutinies. Five dressers, apothecaries, and assistant apothecaries, have been promoted to the next superior grade.

COMPENSATION TO SUFFERERS.

INDIA, it seems, is henceforth to be governed not only for the Indians, but in spite of the Europeans. Grants of land and money, dresses of honour, and complimentary speeches are showered upon all natives of rank who have abstained from cold-blooded murder, while a few words of praise are alone bestowed, and that grudgingly, upon the brave English settlers who threw in their lot with their countrymen, and displayed the courage of veterans by the side of professional combatants. The confiscated estates and property of notorious rebels have been recklessly and exclusively squandered upon natives of doubtful loyalty, with only two trifling exceptions in favour of Europeans. On the other hand, we have seen the Delhi Prize Money withheld from the gallant troops who first stemmed the tide of rebellion, and a force of twelve thousand disciplined soldiers lost to the State through an arrogant demeanour and a niggardly parsimony. Three years, moreover, will have elapsed before any sort of compensation is afforded to the sufferers by the mutiny; and, when afforded, what a meagre redress will it be! On the 14th of last July, in reply to a question by Mr. W. Vansittart, the Secretary of State for India promised that the whole question of compensation should be laid before Parliament; but a few days later the same Minister stated that he proposed to allow one-half of the value of buildings, factories, and crops destroyed by the mutineers, and one-third of the value of cash, jewels, and other personal effects lost from the same cause: the total amount being roughly estimated at one million sterling. Though not what they had a right to expect, judging by analogy, the European sufferers, at least, were willing to accept this compromise in lieu of compensation, and patiently awaited the convenience of Government, securely relying on the faith of a British Minister—just as the European soldiery confided in the words of the Premier; but for the future men will scarcely care to lean on such a broken reed. Notwithstanding the statement made on the 14th of July, that the whole subject of compensation should be laid before the House, it now appears that on the 11th of August a despatch was sent from the Financial Department of the Home Government by no means in keeping with the Indian Secretary's public profession of his intentions. From this document we learn that compensation to the extent of one-half will be accorded for losses on buildings, factories, crops, merchandise, and stock in trade, provided that the total value of such loss do not exceed two thousand rupees. In cases where the admitted loss is greater than that sum—as will happen in nine cases out of ten where Europeans are concerned—compensation is to be awarded to the extent of one thousand rupees, plus “one-third of the sum by which the loss shall exceed two thousand rupees.” With regard to cash, jewels, and personal property, the promise of one-third is adhered to, but with the restriction that in no one case shall the grant exceed five thousand rupees. These compensations are not, however, to be paid until the middle of March, 1860, and possibly not even then. It will also depend upon the total amount of the claims made good whether the proportions just stated shall be paid, or a pro rata reduction made, as no larger sum than one million sterling can be granted for payment of compensation. It would not be difficult to raise a million by means of fines on rebellious districts, but her Majesty's Government prefer that the faithful should suffer than that the guilty be inconvenienced. We admire their clemency far more than their wisdom or sense of justice; but we are curious to know whether this supercilious treatment of European settlers is to be taken as a pledge and ensample of the encouragement and protection future colonisers are to expect. The prospect is certainly not a cheering one, but perhaps by embracing Hindooism they may recommend themselves for a greater share of viceregal favour, while their subsequent return to the fold will ensure them an apotheosis in Exeter Hall.

LORD CANNING AND THE TALOOKDARS OF OUDE.

WE were not of those who objected to Lord Canning's “Confiscation Policy” with regard to the Oude talookdars. In our paper of the 15th May, 1858, we endeavoured to show that the real usurpers were these talookdars themselves, and that his lordship in no way interfered with any individuals who had vested rights in the land. In fact, these “feudal barons,” as some journalists delight to call them, were only farmers of the revenue, who, by means of the universal venality, had contrived to thrust themselves into the place of landed proprietors. Lord Canning, as we still think, was perfectly justified in refusing to recognise their titles to the estates they mismanaged, and in bringing them back to their true position as tax-contractors during the will and pleasure of the existing Government. Towards the conclusion of the article alluded to above, we made the following remarks, which his lordship's late address has fully borne out. “It will soon appear, however, that he has strengthened the hands of Government by reserving the power of rewarding friends, while able to punish foes without resorting to very harsh or violent measures. Without any confiscation of vested rights, without any wholesale seizure of property, he has skilfully availed himself of the opportunity of raising up a new body of talookdars, whose interests will be identical with those of the British Government. He thereby lays the foundation of a native landed aristocracy, who, in future times of trouble, will be found on the side of the Feringhees, prepared to do battle in support of order and the existing state of affairs.”

The “whirligig of time” has brought round its changes to prove the truth of our words. Lord Canning declared null and void the pretensions of the rebellious talookdars at that time in arms against the British Government, but when the revolt was subdued and peace restored he magnanimously revoked his sentence of condemnation, and offered to his humbled adversaries such terms as they would never have obtained had they been fully successful. By so doing he has conciliated a whole province, not merely from a sense of gratitude, but likewise through self-interest. Every one of these talookdars knows right well that his tenure of power depends upon the stability of the British supremacy, and will therefore confine his patriotism henceforth to his own estate. We are advised, indeed, not to be too sanguine, and to take warning from the conduct of the wealthy zemindars of Lower Bengal. But in reality there is no analogy between the two cases. The Bengalee zemindars are for the most part rich sensualists, addicted to voluptuous pleasures, and deaf to the nobler calls of human nature. But the people of Oude are a very different race, and the nobles are men of spirit and of action. That a rough sort of justice will be inaugurated is quite possible, and also that there may be more of equity than of legal technicalities in the settlement of litigious disputes. It may likewise happen that more frequent recourse will be had to native punchayuts than to the magistrates' courts, and that in a personal quarrel a man may be tempted to knock his neighbour down rather than sue him for damages. But does it follow that the people generally will be the less happy, less friendly to one another, or less faithful to the Government? Bishop Berkeley compared the negroes to Irishmen. The comparison will in many respects hold good, substituting Hindostanees for negroes. The ryot looks up to his chief in much the same light as an Irish peasant regards the old squire. There may be a tardiness of payment, a lavish expenditure, some corruption, even some oppression, but after all it is amongst friends and kinsmen, and the stranger hath no part therein. Sincerely do we desire—would that we could hope!—that Lord Canning would carry out this wise policy yet further, and extend it generally to the North-West Provinces. He would thus nobly redeem whatever has been amiss in his past conduct, and even the European settlers would forgive him for his unjust treatment of themselves. Very possibly the revenue would suffer in the first instance, but, on the other hand, the expenditure might be safely diminished in an equal ratio. A smaller armed force would be required, and a less costly police establishment. English magistrates would, of course, still be necessary, but not so the revenue collectors or the interminable annoyance of assessing the taxation. Beyond all doubt there are many objections to such a form of government from a European point of view, but then it is not intended for Europeans. It is that which best suits Asiatics, and which tends to give them as much happiness as they are capable of appreciating, and therefore best fulfils the object and intent of political government. For our own part we tender our cordial and respectful congratulations to Lord Canning for the wisdom and high moral courage he has displayed in this case, and only regret that he should persist in turning a cold shoulder to those who will prove his truest and most trusty friends in future times of peril and disquiet.

POLITICAL NIGHTMARES.

If any one desires to satisfy himself of the empiricism of the art of government and to be freed from all illusions as to the foresight and sagacity of even the ablest and most experienced rulers, he need only cast his eye on the foreign affairs of India since the commencement of the present century. At that period the great object of Indian diplomacy was to check the growth of French influence in Central Asia. The victorious legions of the First Consul were regarded in Calcutta as already on their Alexandrian march, overcoming all opposition, and advancing inevitable as doom towards the rich cities of Hindostan. By a bold and skilful negotiation, however, the Shah-in-Shah was detached from the Gallic alliance, and then the Governor-general once more slept securely within his mosquito curtains. The danger apprehended by Lord Wellesley was, indeed, of a twofold nature. The French might be his most formidable enemies, but the nearest and, perhaps, not the least dreaded were the Affghans, under their restless and inconsequent chief, Zemaun Shah. This dark cloud being thus dissipated, the frontiers of the empire were enlarged and the most powerful of the native States humbled or terrified. But only a few years later the old panic revived. The Treaty of Tilsitt had temporarily united France with Russia, and for a time Persia also was inimical to Britain. Then came the conflicting embassies of Sir John Malcolm and Sir Harford Jones, resulting, however, once more in the acquisition of the support and friendship of the King of Kings. At the same time, missions were despatched to the Affghan potentate, Shah Shuja, and to the yet more powerful ruler, the great leader of the Sikhs, Runjeet Sing. Very costly were the presents laid at the feet of these barbaric chiefs, and great was the rejoicing in Calcutta when it was known that they had deigned to accept the proffered friendship of the British Government. A few more years roll away, and an English officer is seen at the Court of Cabul endeavouring by the economical expenditure of scissora and penknives, and sundry packets of pins and needles, to arrest the march of the Persian army upon Herat and counteract the growing influence of Russia. Herat, indeed, was saved, but only by the appearance of an English squadron in the Persian Gulf, and for the moment Russian intrigues were fairly checkmated. War, however, was declared against the Affghan usurper, Dost Mahomed, and by way of strengthening our position in Hindostan a series of blunders and disasters was committed and endured, the last fruits of which we have gathered in the recent rebellion. The honour of the British arms retrieved, the Gwalior Mahrattas utterly crushed, and Scinde and the Punjab brought under the yoke, our Indian possessions were at length pronounced beyond the reach of danger. One weak point, perhaps, might be detected in the otherwise invulnerable panoply, but that was speedily remedied by the annexation of Oude and the absorption of various smaller States. Then, in truth, the empire, teres atque rotundus, might defy the world in arms. France and Russia united might sweep, if they dared, across the barren mountains of Persia, and through the narrow plains of the Candahar valley. Their proud hosts would be surely overwhelmed as they emerged from the terrible passes of Affghanistan, and would melt away even as the army of Sennacherib. Not that any miraculous interposition would be needed, or even desired. A hundred thousand brave and faithful sepoys, supported by a numerous artillery, would destroy the worn and exhausted invaders as they straggled into the plains through the grim gates that alone afford access from Herat to the north-west frontier. Truly that was the baseless fabric of a dream, an idle vision, a fond and foolish fancy. Our trusted cohorts have proved our most deadly enemies, the lately-dreaded Sikhs our surest allies. The wronged and injured Affghans have been faithful in adversity, while the petted and courted Persians have shown themselves despicable as foes, and worthless as friends. What, then, is the lesson to be learnt from these dismal experiences so little flattering to our vanity and self-love? Is it not that instead of prying into the future and scouting afar off for distant and perhaps imaginary dangers, we should diligently apply ourselves to the work under our hands, conciliating the people subject to our sway by a government suited to their habits and social customs; and, doing our duty to the best of our ability, humbly leave the issues of events to a higher Power, to a Providence that cannot err, and that in its own good time will order all things for the best?

Sir Charles Wood then addressed the gentlemen cadets. He said it was extremely gratifying to himself, as he was sure it must be to everyone associated with him in the government of India, as well as to all the gentlemen present, to hear from the report of the public examiner of the remarkable facility which the gentlemen cadets had displayed upon their examination; but few, perhaps, were aware of the statements contained in the equally satisfactory report of the lieutenant-governor as to their ability, which had only been equalled by their good conduct during the last term—(hear, hear). He said that he never knew a term so free from instances calling for any unfavourable comments from him, and that the general good conduct of all the students was most remarkable—(cheers). He (Sir Charles Wood) was happy to say that the lieutenant-governor further added that they had been stimulated by the competition in the scientific corps, in consequence of that competition not being limited as formerly to the students of the fourth term; and he trusted that this presented a favourable augury of that more open competition which would hereafter be established under the powers of the recent Act of Parliament. He doubted not that the education they would receive in that college would stimulate them to still further exertions and greater industry, so that by open competition they would prove themselves fit to fill those high positions which the gentlemen educated at Addiscombe had at all times maintained. In another point of view a change had been made, as the Secretary of State had called in the assistance of the Council of Military Education, but he hoped that his friend on the right (Sir F. Abbot), and all the professors connected with the college, would not think that he had done so from any distrust in the ability which they had shown in the conduct of the establishment. He (Sir Charles Wood) was made acquainted with the merits of the college some years ago, when he was connected with the government of India. What he learnt then, and had heard since, left on his mind an impression that Addiscombe was the best military school in this country—(cheers). But they were all aware that much greater attention had, during the last few years, been paid to education throughout the country than heretofore, and he believed that the mainspring of the improvement which had taken place was to be found in the almost general inspection of schools.—(hear, hear). It was very advisable to bring together the results of the experience acquired in each school in the country, and he thought they would not have done justice to Addiscombe if they had not availed themselves of the best assistance which the country could afford. All our military schools were subject to the inspection and report of the Council of Military Education, and it would have been unfair to that college to have withheld from it the same advantages. He hoped that the Council would even learn something from the system pursued there, and apply some of its principles to other schools; but what they mainly felt in calling in that assistance was, that it would not, in the slightest degree, diminish the interest which the Secretary of State and the Council for India took in keeping up the efficiency of Addiscombe—(cheers). The Council of Military Education would report to them from time to time, and they would be most happy to avail themselves of any improvements which they might suggest. Depend upon it, they would take precisely the same interest as was formerly taken by the late Court of Directors, not only in the welfare of the college, but in the progress of all educated within its walls—(cheers). It had been the custom on these occasions for the chairman to address some general observations to the students, and he might say that, in coming down from town that morning, he read with the greatest interest an address made to them last year by the noble lord his predecessor in office, who had enjoyed the advantage of seeing in India with his own eyes the conduct of the Indian service, both civil and military, and who, therefore, spoke with an authority to which he could not pretend. He must repeat that he had read the address with the greatest admiration, and he did not know that he could do better than recommend all of them to peruse it again and again, being the ablest speech ever delivered to gentlemen going out to India, and contained the soundest advice that could be given to them at that important period of their career. Since that day a great change had taken place in India. The mutiny was entirely at an end, and, with the blessing of the Almighty, he trusted that peace and tranquillity would now prevail throughout that country. A more fearful calamity had probably never before befallen any other country, and the only satisfaction those who took an interest in India derived from it was, that in that emergency all branches of the Indian service showed a courage, an energy, and a self-devotion which unmistakably indicated that they had not degenerated from the noble race of men by whom the empire was acquired. He trusted sincerely that such an event would not occur again in the lifetime of those he addressed; but, if it did, he knew that they would not be wanting in the qualities which distinguished their ancestors. What they had now to do was to preserve that vast empire, and to prevent the recurrence of a similar calamity. The gentlemen cadets about to depart for India would take no unimportant share in the government of that country. Of course their primary duties would be in their military capacity, but it should be remembered that in order to maintain the efficiency of troops, not only was mere military knowledge requisite—officers should endeavour to obtain the confidence and attachment of the men under their command, so that they might feel that they were truly their best friends and advisers—(cheers). There was no other country but India in which military men were called upon at so early a period of life to discharge important political as well as civil duties. The gentlemen cadets, therefore, knew not how soon they might be placed in positions of great trust and responsibility, and deep would be their regret if, when the opportunity presented itself, they found themselves unprepared. In India, where our rule over vast masses of people was maintained by a small number of Europeans, the security of the Government depended more on the conduct of individuals than in any other part of the world. If they did not acquire the confidence of the natives, they could not expect much attachment from them; but if they made themselves acquainted with their habits, feelings, and opinions, they might command their respect and confidence, exercise a sway over their minds, and be the means of conferring inestimable blessings upon them. We were a dominant race, ruling not by numbers, but by the force of our energy, courage, and moral character; and he trusted that each of them would do his utmost to maintain unimpaired the character of a British gentlemen and officer—(cheers). The right hon. gentleman, concluded by expressing a hope that his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury would address to the gentlemen cadets a few observations on the higher considerations which ought to influence the conduct of Englishmen and Christians in India—(cheers).

The Archbishop of Canterbury said that, having been called upon by the Secretary for India, he could not refrain from saying a few words, although he had no intention to preach a sermon. He felt a patriotic interest in Addiscombe, but he also had a personal interest in it in consequence of its being in his own diocese and under his pastoral superintendence. He was acquainted with the heads of the college and the professors, and he knew what ability and zeal they had displayed in the discharge of their duties, and he felt bound to congratulate them now, as he had done on former occasions, on the success of their labours. Independent, however, of these considerations, it would be impossible for him not to feel a very lively interest in such a body of young men whose destination was India, which was the subject of so many thoughts and prayers and so much earnest hope in this country. The English people anxiously looked forward to the light of Gospel truth illuminating the darkness which enveloped that vast empire; and those he addressed would be able to bear an important part in bringing about such a consummation—not, indeed, in the way of interference with the native superstitions, however revolting and distressing to witness. There were two ways in which our holy religion could be propagated—the one by direct teaching; the other by example, without which teaching was of no use—(cheers). He, therefore, trusted that in leaving this country for India they would determine to illustrate by their practice the Christian principles which they had embraced. In that way, by God's mercy, we might in the course of time be enabled to look upon the people of India not only as our fellow-subjects, but also as our fellow-Christians—(cheers).

The company then separated, and proceeded to inspect the sand models and drawings of the students, which were well executed, and elicited general praise.

BOMBAY, BARODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.

The report of the directors states that the long-vexed question of the approach to Bombay had been satisfactorily settled. The direct line from the Veturnee river, via Bassein to Dhadur, as compared with the line joining the Great Indian Peninsula at Purseck, showed that the direct line would cost less and be eight miles shorter, and that the curves on it were few and easy, while those on the other line were numerous and sharp. The ruling gradient on the direct line was one in 500, being the same as on the line from Ahmedabad to the Veturnee river, while the alternative line presented a ruling gradient of one in 100. Those advantages in favour of the direct line decided the Government to sanction it accordingly. On the 3rd of October last, fifteen spans of the Nerbudda bridge had been finished, and arrangements were in progress for the vigorous prosecution of the works. Up to the 19th of November last, 67,000 tons of iron materials, &c., had been shipped from England to Bombay. Over 1,800 tons of materials on board the Jessica, including four ballasting engines, were lost, but the risk to the company was fully insured. The company's Act, which received the Royal assent on the 13th of August last, contained the necessary powers for the conversion of the fully paid-up shares of the company into stock. The report of Mr. Forde, the resident engineer, stated that every preparation was being made for the erection of the Taptee Viaduct, and he had confidence that this and the Nerbudda bridge would be completed before the next monsoon. The first iron bridge north of Broach would be ready in a few days for an engine to cross it. Mr. Forde had sent up parties to commence all the bridges between Broach and Baroda, hoping that they might be so far advanced before the materials arrived for the Nerbudda bridge as to be able to have all the tackle at liberty for the latter work. The progress reports to the 31st of August last showed that the works executed on the line between Surat and Ahmedabad, 143 miles, consisted of the whole of the earthworks, 98 per cent. of the brickwork and masonry, 19 per cent. of the ballasting, 72 per cent. of fencing, and 45 per cent. of the permanent way. Of the works between Surat and Veturnee, 117 miles, 40 per cent. of the earthworks, 8 per cent. of the brickwork and masonry, and 47 per cent. of the fencing were executed. The directors conclude their report by adverting to the satisfactory symptoms of national improvement which have recently appeared in India, and to the probability of most of the Indian railway companies attaining a rate of dividend considerably exceeding the minimum interest guaranteed by the Government of India. The capital account to the 31st of August in India, and to the 31st of October in England, showed that £1,399,281 had been received, and £1,221,274 expended, leaving a balance of £75,308 with the Secretary of State for India in Council, and £102,698 at bankers' and cash in India. The guaranteed interest for eight half-years ending the 30th of June last amounted in the aggregate to £100,375. The balance at the bankers' in respect to the interest account amounted to £1,137.

Revue Orientale et Americaine. No. XV.
Paris: Challamel. London: Trübner and Co

We have much pleasure in directing the attention of our readers to this really clever periodical, which, we fear, is not so well known in this country as it deserves to be. Some idea of the line it takes up may be formed from the Table of Contents of the December number now lying before us. The first article is devoted to the Birman Empire, and is avowedly compiled, by M. Léon de Rosny, from English authorities. This is followed by a brief but spirited memoir on the subject of a statue in the British Museum supposed to be a "Terminal Statue of Pan," but which M. Texier proves to be one of Midas, King of Phrygia. This paper is in many ways full of interest, and evinces no ordinary share of the critical faculty. There is also an exceedingly sensible article on the Canalisation of the Isthmus of Suez, making due allowance for the very French reason assigned for believing in the practicability of the scheme as a mere engineering enterprise,—"Pourquoi? par mille raisons scientifiques et enfin parce que le Créateur, qui nous incite par le besoin, ne peut mentir au génie et aux espérances de la création." Notwithstanding this touch of sentiment, M. Charles de Labarthe is eminently practical in his treatment of the question, and clearly demonstrates the certain failure of the project as a commercial speculation. The remaining papers, not one of which is without considerable merit, are a Memoir on the Diacetic Painting and Figurative Writing of the Ancient Mexicans; a translation from Saadi; a characteristic tale from the literature of the Finns; and summaries of contemporary history, Eastern and American.

CHINESE DELICACIES.—We have to notice a curious and interesting communication to the Academy of Sciences, by M. Payen, of certain substances, if not new, at least but little known, from which nutritious jellies may be extracted. In 1856, M. de Monttravel brought over from China a few bundles of thin white strips of a substance called China moss, said to grow on trees in the south of China and in the Philippine islands. M. Payen, upon examination, found it to be quite exempt from organic structure, and rich in various principles soluble in water, besides a small quantity soluble in alcohol. The remainder, though insoluble in cold water, would swell considerably in it, and then assumed the form of rectangular prisms which appeared to have been manufactured in that shape by means of moulds. It was soluble in boiling acetic acid, leaving a nitrogenous residue amounting to about three-hundredths of its weight. But the most important property of this swelling substance was that it would dissolve in boiling water, and when cool, coagulate in a colourless and transparent jelly. The quantity of water which it could thus fix was equal to 500 times its own weight, so that it yielded ten times more jelly than the best animal gelatine, and much lighter. This substance is slowly soluble in very small quantities of concentrated sulphuric and hydrochloric acid, when it assumes a brown colour, and becomes a mass which resists both hot and cold water, and even caustic alkaline solutions. As this property does not belong to any other known vegetable principle, M. Payen has thought it expedient to give this curious substance a peculiar name—viz., gelose; it contains about 43 per cent. of carbon, 51 of oxygen, and 6 of hydrogen. Gelose does not exist in any lichen, but it may be extracted from the gelidium corneum, a seaweed found near Java. M. Payen was also induced to try the celebrated birds'-nests of China, built by a kind of swallow (salangana fusipaga), in order to ascertain whether they contained any similar principle. Various authors have attributed the nutritive properties of these birds'-nests to their being composed of certain fungi, such as the plocaria lichens, the gelidium corneum, &c. Willoughby affirms that the birds pick up a tenacious sea froth (!) upon the rocks, and that this curious froth is produced by fishes. Kämpfer asserts that the nests are made of molluscs, an opinion which is also adopted by Linnaeus. Everard Home, Gevais, Van Beneden, and Prince Charles Bonaparte are of opinion that their matter is merely a salivary secretion which the salangana has at its command during the season in which it builds its nest. In 1856, M. Simonet de Maisonneuve sent home a white substance in long slips, stating it to be the purified substance of these nests; and Professor J. Cloquet found that it yielded a light jelly like that of isinglass. M. Payen adds a few observations to the above. The normal substance of the nests, dried in vacuo at boiling point, emits ammoniacal vapours, and contains various soluble chlorides, sulphates, and phosphates, besides carbonate of lime. When reduced to powder it will swell in cold water to eight and a half times its value; in boiling water it will dissolve, leaving 7 per cent. of an insoluble residue. It does not coagulate like jelly on cooling, and appears to be an animal mucus of a peculiar nature, which M. Payen proposes to call cubilose.—Galignani.

RANGOON GENERAL DISPENSARY.—The civil surgeon of Rangoon is making an effort to re-open the "Rangoon General Dispensary," and calls on the inhabitants for monthly subscriptions to meet the expenditure of Rs. 128 per month. Cannot a town like Rangoon, with a trade of three millions, sterling support an hospital for the many sailors who visit it?

XIII. Engineer Cadets will go through a further course of training at Chatham for one year, as commissioned officers on full pay. Artillery Cadets will undergo a professional training at Woolwich for six months as commissioned officers on full pay.

MAPS OF INDIA &amp; CHINA.

MAP of INDIA; showing the British

Territories subdivided into Collectorate, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways and telegraphs are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

MAP of the ROUTES in INDIA; with Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size 9 ft. 3 in. wide; 3 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies, and shows also the railways and telegraphs.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.

These potent remedies constitute a matris medicina in themselves, for there is no internal or external disorder, controllable by medicine, for which the one or the other of them is not a positive remedy. Eruptions, tumours, scrofula, scurvy, cancer, asthma, rheumatism, gout, and dropsy entirely subside and disappear under the action of these joint remedies; in cases of indigestion, sick-headache, bile, liver complaints, debility, and other disorders originating in the internal organs, the Pills produce the most astonishing results unimagined. The student of nature knows how simple are her ways; if one preparation can throw out all impurities from the blood, disease is conquered—art triumphant because it adopts the simplicity of nature.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evenings of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal, are despatched via Southampton, on the 13th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

The Bombay Mail of the 26th November arrived at the General Post-office only this morning, being four days overdue. The chief point of interest in the papers we have received is the confirmation of the rumour of the Nana's death. The Government officials, at least, are disposed to credit the report, though the Bombay Gazette prefers to believe that the miscreant has merely died to the world, and assumed the character of a Jogee. According to other accounts, he actually put off "this mortal coil" on the 24th September, at a place called Tarra Ghurrie, his death being caused by fever.

The winter campaign on the frontiers of Nepal has been inaugurated by some slight skirmishes, in which H.M.'s 54th gave a good account of the enemy. It is stated that the Nepaulese troops are at last positively advancing to co-operate with the British; but it would be scarcely wise to place much reliance on their zeal or vigilance.

In Central India the moveable columns are beating up the jungles, and in the Chirkaree district Colonel Turner succeeded in dispersing, with some slaughter, a small body of rebels or marauders. Colonel Primrose is also reported to have been equally fortunate.

Mr. Souter, superintendent of police in Kandeish, has telegraphed to Government an account of an important service he has had the opportunity to render. With a hundred men of the Ahmednuggur and Nassick police, he surprised the notorious Bheel leader Bhagojee Naick, whom he took prisoner after a desperate resistance. Fifty-one bodies were counted on the ground, and Bhagojee Naick himself was hanged on the very spot where he had murdered Captain Henry twelve months before. In this case vengeance, if not swift, has at least been sure. Mr. Souter's horse was struck by three bullets. A zemindar, a sowar, and two police sepoy were killed, and several men and horses wounded.

The Okhamundul expedition has returned to Bombay, leaving H.M.'s 33rd and the 6th Bombay N.I. to follow up the Waghers. Dwarka, however, was reported to be perfectly tranquil. Not so in the Nizam's dominions; the Rohillas appear to have become unusually troublesome, and have plundered several villages close to Hyderabad. A military force has taken the field against them, and it is to be hoped will inflict such a chastisement as will not soon be forgotten even by those reckless freebooters.

A very sad event has taken place in the Bunnoo district. Captain R. Meham, of the Bengal artillery, has been barbarously murdered by some Wuzerees while travelling by dooly dakh from Bunnoo to Kohat, on his way down-country to assume his new appointment as private secretary to the Lieutenant-governor, North-West Provinces. Captain Meham was escorted by two sowars belonging to a contingent maintained by Khoja Mahomed Khan Khuttuck, who seem to have fled with the bearers without firing a shot. It is supposed that the unfortunate officer was cut down as he sprang out of the dooly, and before he could make use of his fire-arms.

The Bombay Times speaks with an air of authority on the early transformation of the Calcutta Council into a sort of Cabinet. According to our contemporary, Sir Bartle Frere is to be the Home Secretary, Sir James Outram the Military Secretary, and the Right Hon. James Wilson Financial Secretary. With such men at the helm, India can hardly fail to be well governed.

The Viceroy was on the 13th Nov. at Futtelghur, where a durbar was to be held on the following day. His lordship was expected at Agra about the 25th.

We would direct the attention of our readers to the official correspondence between the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Oude and the Secretary to the Indian Government, which appears in our present issue. The Oude talookdars, it will be seen, are invested with certain magisterial powers, and also with a limited revenue jurisdiction over their own estates. In other words, they have full power and ample opportunities for improving the condition of their tenants and dependants, while salutary restrictions are placed upon their power to do wrong.

The Governor of Bombay arrived at the Presidency Town on the 22nd Nov., and has taken up his residence at Malabar Point, but the Commander-in-chief and staff remain at Poona. Sir Bartle Frere and Mr. P. W. Legeyt were to proceed to Calcutta on the 27th in the steamer Feroze.

The city of Madras was for the first time lighted with gas on the 21st November.

The old Civil College at Haileybury is about to undergo a transformation worthy of a Christmas pantomime. It is to be converted into barracks for recruits for the Indian army, who will there be drilled and made into soldiers before embarking for the East.

In reply to numerous correspondents, we can only repeat that the Delhi and Lucknow prize-money will eventually be paid to the troops engaged in those brilliant operations, but as to the precise date of such payment, no decision has yet been announced. The amount of the Delhi prize-money was £400,000.

BENGAL.

THE ABOLITION OF BRIGADES.

The Calcutta Gazette of the 29th October announces the second of a series of reductions in the military staff. The first reduced the commissariat establishment. The second abolishes all brigade commands. Those of Gwalior, Lucknow, Lahore, Ferozepore, Jullundur, Sealkote, and Barrackpore are swept away at once, and for the future the senior officer in a station will command the brigade without allowances for so doing. The latter measure is of course received by the senior officers of the army with extreme dissatisfaction. The appointments abolished are in the first place the prizes of working field officers, looked forward to with expectation by every officer in the army. For one man actually injured ten have lost a possible reward. Then, it is said and believed, that the order seriously lowers the position of the local army. They have only a fixed share of the divisional commands, but the brigades from the number of stations they occupy fell practically to them. The order, moreover, does not, and in fact cannot, affect the position of officers in the Imperial Army at home, and one service therefore retains what the other has been compelled to forego. Finally it is said, the office, wholly apart from its utility as a prize, was a working office. A regiment is as much as one man can manage, a European regiment often a great deal more. Yet the senior commanding officer is now compelled to perform all the duties of the brigade. One or the other must perforce be neglected, and as the brigade work is unpaid, and brings none of that headquarters' reputation which the smartness of a regiment invariably secures, it seems certain that it is the brigade which will suffer. Not only will cantonment duties, always most important, be slurred over, but the brigadier's interest is thrown back, as it were, on the details of regimental discipline. That is the very mistake so bitterly lamented in England. We have officers in plenty equal to regimental work, but generals, men accustomed to handle troops in masses, are scarcely to be found. Doubtless, the senior officer will and must acquire the mechanical routine indispensable to his position on a field day, but all men know how additional and unpaid work is usually performed. No real power is now left between the commanding officer and the general of division, whose authority may extend over a kingdom. Immediate appeal to such an authority is out of the question, and the army is once again reduced to a congeries of practically independent clans. What was required was more brigades with brigadiers possessed of actual authority; not military post officers, but real chiefs.

We say these are the arguments which are and will be repeated all over India. To the first two we attach little importance. Reductions are as inevitable as taxation, and the army must accept its misfortunes like all other classes. If the pressure becomes unbearable, it will right itself. The assertion that it is intended to lower the local army is also premature. It may be correct, but no human being can prove that it is so, until the general scheme of reorganisation has been revealed. That it is intended permanently to place the local European army in a position of inferiority to the Queen's troops we at once refuse to believe. No policy so suicidal could receive the sanction of any minister of the Crown. It is time enough to protest when such a plan appears. The third reason is one which we can only repeat. If correct, as we fear it is, the objection is fatal, and efficiency is once more sacrificed to an economy too trifling to be felt.

It is not on professional but on political grounds that we object to the abolition of brigades. Admit, for the sake of argument, that the measure is as wise as we believe it will prove foolish, and the order is still an error. Why publish it now? The empire surely would not be ruined by the continuance of brigade allowances for another twelve months. As part of a great scheme having for its end the definitive reconstruction of the army, almost any change would be accepted, if not with pleasure, at least with a clear understanding of its cause. Officers have enough of pride left to see in the thoroughness of a new organisation, in the renewed vitality and force it secures for the body to which they belong, some compensation for personal losses. But a peddling reduction of this kind, bearing no visible connection with any other change, tending in no degree to increase efficiency, is felt simply as a reduction, as an arbitrary deduction of so much from every man's previous prospects. Nobody knows but that the next order may abolish colonelcies. There are seventy gentlemen in England drawing about £120,000 a year among them, who, for the practical work of an army, are of about as much use as so many dress swords. Their appointments, almost the only avowed military sinecures, are untouched, while working appointments, offices which might be made the centres of a new and strong organisation, are chopped away. There is no principle apparently at work. If the object be efficiency the end is obviously not gained? If it be economy, why are the colonelcies left unreformed? If it be simply to smooth the way for a change in the position of the local army, why not make that change all at once, publish a coherent and intelligible plan? As it is, the army needs a cheaper dress, and the Government snips off half an epaulette.—Friend of India.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH IN INDIA.

The Red Sea and India Telegraph Company notify that they are now prepared to transmit a message of twenty words from any station in India to England for £2. 17s. By the 15th of January next the break between Kurrachee and Aden will be removed, and it is not likely that the charge will then exceed two rupees a word. On the other side of India the Australian telegraph is commenced, the Dutch line to Singapore is progressing, and public opinion and the China war will soon stimulate the Government of India into completing the wire from Akyab to Rangoon and Singapore. The great centre of telegraphic communication between the antipodes, between London and Sydney or New Zealand, will then be India, and on the perfection of the Indian lines and the Indian system the whole will to a large extent depend. By the beginning of 1861, India will be the telegraphic highway of the Eastern hemisphere. China opened, the day cannot be far distant when Singapore shall be in communication with Shanghai, Japan, and the Amoor, to which Russia is extending a line from St. Petersburg. Submarine communication in the Pacific with its countless isles should be as easy as in the Atlantic, and the old boast of Puck would be a reality, a girdle would be thrown round the earth, and intelligence flashed along it in the advancing progress of science in less than forty minutes.

To us, however, at the present moment, our own lines are of more real interest, and the report of Sir W. B. O'Shaughnessy for the past official year enables us to ascertain the progress we have made and the position in which we now stand. During 1858-59, a year free from at least active revolt, nearly 2,500 miles were laid down, making the total length in May last in India and Ceylon, 10,123 miles, with 154 offices or telegraphic stations. From Colombo to Kurrachee on the west, and to Dacca on the east, there was not a break. The wire is now being laid down from Dacca to Chittagong and Akyab, whence, we presume, the Government of India when it is no longer allowed to outrage civilisation, will continue it to Rangoon and Singapore. Branch wires will also connect the East Coast line with the rising ports of Coconada, Coringa, Masuli-patam, and Calingapatam. In the way of farther extension little remains to be desired. When the number of messages increases, and when the lines on either side of Hindostan are completed, it is evident 154 stations will not suffice for the wants of India, and that there must be a double line, not only from Calcutta to Allahabad, but right through to Bombay and Kurrachee.

The department takes much credit to itself for the speed, and comparative freedom from errors, with which messages are sent. An ordinary instance is given. On the 10th of July last, the first bulletin of news of 140 words was transmitted during bad weather from Bombay to Madras in one hour and fifty minutes, and to Calcutta in four hours and seven minutes, copies being taken at all the intermediate stations. But this cannot be taken as a fair specimen of the working in the case of private messages. Once only within this year has a message reached Serampore from Calcutta in less than three hours, a distance of twelve miles. We fear the experience of the public is not that of the writer of the report, though the evil of delay has been of late considerably reduced. Now that payment of official messages is imperative, their number as well as length has been very much diminished. Red tape prolixity is cut short when it has to be paid for on the spot. Thus in 1858-59 there were sent—

Private messages .. ..	1,01,164
Service ditto .. ..	56,670
Total .. ..	1,57,834

The two classes of messages vary in length in an opposite ratio, more than a third of the former being under sixteen words, and a fourth under thirty-two, while of the latter only one-twelfth were under sixteen words, and four-fifths from twenty-five to fifty words and upwards. But in the first month of the enforcement of cash payments the service messages were reduced to a third of their former number and length, and the public gained accordingly. The natives transmitted 39,724, or nearly four per cent. of the whole number of private messages. The largest number was sent from the Bombay stations, thus—

		Of which by Natives.
Bombay .. ..	28,334	17,647
Bengal (Proper) .. ..	19,474	8,606
Madras .. ..	18,676	4,204

a result to be expected from the commercial importance of Bombay.

As to price, the report claims for the tariff of the Indian telegraph the position of being the cheapest in the world. Messages are now sent according to geographical, not telegraphic distance. Beyond the minimum of sixteen words one anna may now be paid for each extra word, instead of an additional rate, and prefix designations, such as "Mr." or "Baboo," are free. Now men no longer cramp their messages so as to keep them within the minimum limit, and thus render them unintelligible. While a message of twenty-five words in England for a distance beyond 150 miles cost Rs. 2, the same in India for 400 miles costs Rs. 1-0, and the difference in favour of the Indian tariff is greater as the distances increase. A message of twenty-five words from Galle to Peshawur, a distance of 2,100 miles, costs Rs. 9-6, while from London to Constantinople, a distance of 2,181 miles, the charge is Rs. 22-12. But the American charge for the same message for 2,000 miles, from New York to New Orleans, is the same as in India. These facts may afford subject for congratulation, but what we want and soon must have is two rates, and two rates only, all over India. Within 100 miles of any station a message of sixteen words should be one rupee, and beyond that to the most distant parts of the continent, two rupees. Ultimately, we believe, there must be an eight anna rate. As with the penny postage, such a reduction would be met by an increased revenue, and all confusion avoided. The reduction of rates in April last was financially successful. The messages from Calcutta at once increased sixty-six per cent., and from Bombay eighty per cent. A farther increase, if it choked the line, which the Bombay superintendent fears, would only accelerate the doubling of the wires on the main routes.

The actual errors of the signallers in the transmission of messages are naturally made by the receiver, and in the Bengal circle do not amount to more than 1 in 172. Ninety per cent. are numerical, even though figures are telegraphed as words. Names follow next in order, as we have reason to know from the Overland bulletins, where, to quote the instances in the report, the Piedmontese were said to have defeated the Austrians at "Versailles" instead of Varese, and the Government of India was transferred from the Company to "Brown." Hence every name is now signalled twice, and once repeated by the receiver. Sir W. O'Shaughnessy states "with perfect confidence that no lines in existence of equal extent could exhibit a smaller proportion of errors or a greater degree of accuracy in all ordinary work."

The average cash receipts of the department are Rs. 40,000 a month, and the expenditure Rs. 86,810, but this sum includes the expenses for construction as well as working. When the former element is struck out, and the number of messages increases with the development of trade and the improvement of the department itself, the deficit will be considerably reduced. But £50,000 a year is a trifle to pay for the advantage of regular telegraphic communication.

Sir W. O'Shaughnessy and his subordinates deserve credit for these results, though praise would have come from the Press or his official superiors better than from his own report. But we still ask for these two reforms:—1st. A further reduction in the tariff to two uniform rates of one anna a word for messages under 100 miles, and two annas beyond that limit to any part of India. 2nd. Greater speed in the transmission of private messages. It may be that a message is sent from one station to another in a minute, and is transcribed and given to the peon in four more. But the peon must sit down, and smoke and gossip, and it may be sleep, ere he puts the message into the proper hands. Hours are lost, and the telegraph is blamed for this delay. An electric wire with native peons at either end of it loses half its power.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE NANA.—An Oude correspondent of the Englishman, writing on Oct. 27, furnishes apparently authentic news of the death of the Nana. The Government officials do not now seem to disbelieve the report of Nana Rao's death, and the report seems pretty certain to be correct. The miscreant died on Sept. 24, of fever, at a place called Tarra Ghurrie, near to Dhang and Deokhur; he had suffered previously from repeated attacks, and at one time was so ill that his attendants believed him to be dead, and the usual gifts were distributed amongst the Brahmans; he, however, recovered partially, and lingered on till Sept. 24.

THE NEPAUL FRONTIER.—It is believed that the rebel force on the Nepaul frontier consists of about 6,000 of all kinds, of which about 1,000 are sowars; this number includes also camp-followers, women, and children, so perhaps, besides the sowars, only 3,000 sepoys remain. The greater number of these are encamped in the Dhang and Deokur valley, over the first range of hills, but still small bodies are dotted about at the edge of the Terai jungle all along the Nepaul frontier. Benec Madhub and Mummoo Khan are also in the Dhang Deokur valley, but the larger body of men are attached to Jowola Persaud, the late Nana's confidential servant. This man has also the charge of the late Nana Rao's family and treasure, they have still remaining with them about two elephants' load of Government ammunition. A Goorka force is said to be approaching the outer range of hills, and the rebels are informed by their airdars that this force is coming to assist them against the British. The Begum has written to them not to be afraid, for help was coming to them soon. Some of the rebels have tried to advance northward to get into Thibet, but the Goorkas disarmed them, and sent them back into the Terai. The sepoys have had no regular pay from their chiefs, since they left Lucknow, but until Nana Rao's death they were always regularly fed. A few Christian drummers from the mutinous regiments are said to be with the rebels, but they have turned Mahomedans and live with the rebels. Some reports state that there is a European sergeant with them, who also has turned Musulman, but this has not been corroborated. From further inquiries which have been made, there is no reason at present to believe that there is any European man or woman now alive in the rebels' hands.—Englishman.

COMPENSATION COMMISSION.—An Allahabad Government Gazette extraordinary, dated the 12th November, makes the following announcement:—"In accordance with paragraph 2 of Notification No. 91, dated 29th October, 1859, published in the Calcutta Gazette of the same date, the Honourable the Lieutenant-governor has been pleased to appoint the undermentioned gentlemen to be Commissioners for the investigation of claims to compensation for losses incurred during the mutiny, in the divisions opposite their names:—Mr. F. B. Pearson, Commissioner for the Agra Division. Mr. S. J. Becher, Commissioner for the Allahabad, Benares, Jubbulpore, and Jhansie Divisions. The Commissioner for the Rohilkund, Meerut, and Kumaon Divisions, will be appointed hereafter. The Commissioners will commence their labours on or about the 15th November, and will give due notice to each registered claimant, or his agent, at what place, and within what period he must be in attendance to prosecute his claims."

THE GARHWAL "DIFFICULTY."—Troops are to be employed to keep the new Rajah of Gurhwal on his throne. A detachment of the Goorkha regiment, stationed at Dehra, has proceeded to Mussoorie, en route to the Tehree Rajah's district. Here is a new quarrel, and the poor inhabitants of the mountains are to be forced into submission to the new ruler of Tehree by the Goorkha soldiers. There are two brothers who are striving for the throne. A writer in the Delhi Gazette says, "the people of the country care no more for one brother than the other. The Maharanee and other widows of the late Rajah have, I hear, sent a petition to the Governor-general in Shere Sing's favour. His brothers still stick to him through all his misfortunes, and three out of the four have been ordered to Dehra under surveillance. At the installation of Ba-waun Sye, I hear that scarcely a single respectable inhabitant of the country was present except his own parasites; and, to wind up, troops are now sent into the country to enforce obedience to him."

COLONEL PRIMROSE'S COLUMN had an engagement with the rebels on the 23rd Oct., at a place called Gorruckpore, near Huttah, and it is stated that eight of the enemy have been killed, and seven taken prisoners. One of these latter acknowledges that the leader, Muckoond Sing, is also wounded. No casualties occurred on our side. A small party of the 1st Regiment Madras Native Infantry have also had a brush, losing one sepoy (killed) and a havildar wounded, but Lieutenant Hodges succeeded in killing two rebels with his revolver.

THE PUNJAB.—A sad and terrible event happened in the neighbourhood of Bunnoo, on the night of the 5th Nov. Captain R. Meham, of the artillery, who lately commanded the battery at Bunnoo, and had just been appointed private secretary to the Lieutenant-governor of the North-West Provinces, left the station by dawk for Kohat, on the evening of the 5th. He was escorted by two police sowars, armed with carbines and swords, and he himself had a Colt's revolver. When near Luttumur, a post in the Kohat district, about sixteen miles from Bunnoo, a party of five Wuzerees, who had been skulking behind some bushes close to the road, rushed out and attacked the doolie. Meham was left alone to struggle with his murderers. He was out to pieces almost immediately. The revolver and most of the contents of the doolie were carried off, so it is doubtful whether he had time to use the pistol; but as he was in a weak state from severe illness, the chances are he was overpowered and cut down at once. Nothing certain is known as to what tribe the murderers belong. The Cabul Khyle Wuzerees are suspected, but as spies have been sent into the hills to gain information, the fact will soon be known.

PRIVILEGE OF ADOPTION.—From a Government notification, it appears that at the Cawnpore durbar held on the 3rd Nov. the Viceroy was pleased to inform the Maharajas of Rewah and Chirkaree, and the Jageedars of Logasee and Gourihar, that, in consideration of their loyalty to the British Government, and of the services rendered by them during the rebellion, the Government would, in the event of failure to any one of them of direct heirs, recognise the privilege of adoption according to the ancient customs of their respective families.

CALCUTTA COUNCIL.—We are told that a very important change is about to take place in the constitution of the Executive Council of the Viceroy, which is to be modelled somewhat after the fashion of her Majesty's Cabinet. The members of Council will become Secretaries of State, and, as such, responsible for the conduct of all matters in their several departments. The present secretaries will become under-secretaries, we presume; and should this important change really transpire, we augur the happiest results therefrom. The sinecures of the Council Board will no longer remain a standing offence to grievance-mongers; and with distinct responsibilities devolving upon each member of the Government, we shall have the best guarantee of efficient departmental conduct. We are told that the new Indian Cabinet will stand as follows:—President and Secretary for Political Affairs—Lord Canning; Home-secretary—Sir Bartle Frere; Secretary-at-War—Sir James Outram; Minister of Finance—Right Hon. James Wilson. The power of opinion will give India a good government yet. We are also assured that the admission of non-official members to the Legislative Council has been decided upon.—Bombay Times.

EUROPEAN NEWSPAPERS IN INDIA.—It appears from certain demi-official records that about forty-three thousand copies of European newspapers have been received in India during the year 1858-59, which gives an increase of about 4,000 copies over the total of the preceding year. This shows that the desire of the Indian public for reading European newspapers is annually increasing.

A MAHOMEDAN DESPERADO.—The Calcutta papers publish a report of a case decided in the Nizamut Adawlat on the 20th of October. The prisoner, who was a Mahomedan, was sentenced to death by Mr. Atherton, Sessions Judge of Sarun, a judgment subsequently confirmed by the superior Court. He appears to have been a fair sample of the reckless Mussulman desperadoes. He entered the Zemindary Cutcherry with a drawn sword in one hand and a stick in the other, and demanded the production of a woman, in search of whom he had come to the village. In order, probably, to frighten the servants, he proclaimed himself a rebel. On his refusal to put up his sword, he was seized by two of the parties present, who endeavoured to disarm him. He struck at them repeatedly with his sword, and at length inflicted a severe wound on the head of another party present, which caused the man's death a few days afterwards. He was eventually overpowered, and secured by the villagers. While under trial he seized a sword, and attempted to escape.

KIRWEE PRIZE-MONEY.—The amount of property captured at Kirwee appears to have been enormous. It is stated that the prize-money is so immense that Lord Clyde's share as Commander-in-Chief in India will alone amount to one hundred and twenty thousand pounds! Sir George Whitlock's share being half of that sum. Captains' shares are estimated at between three and four thousand pounds, and subalterns at a proportionate figure.

THE PEEL MONUMENT FUND.—Memorandum for the information of the subscribers to the Peel Monument Fund.—Soon after the death of the late Sir William Peel it was proposed to erect, by subscription amongst the military service, a monument to his memory. Major-general Sir H. Hope Grant, Colonel Macpherson, and Brigadier the Hon. P. Herbert, consented to be trustees of the fund to be raised. Colonel Pakenham acted provisionally as honorary secretary. The Agra and United Service Bank and its branches received subscriptions. Circulars were issued in July, 1858, and were responded to by subscriptions from a large number of stations and departments in Bengal, and by several subscriptions from Madras and Bombay, and from other commands, which were paid into the Agra and United Service Bank as received. At the end of October, Sir James Outram, who from absence had not before heard of the project, joined with a liberal subscription, and kindly undertook to form at Calcutta a committee to extend the subscription, which had scarcely reached the amount expected, and to carry out the original intention of communicating with Sir William Peel's family, and erecting the memorial according to their wishes, and the amount of subscription. The committee was formed—Sir James Outram, Major Atkinson, Mr. Ritchie, and others. Lieut.-colonel Mackenzie, honorary secretary, who took charge of the arrangements in November, 1858. The committee have communicated through Colonel Herbert, who is in England, with Sir William Peel's family, and have arranged as follows:—The amount at their disposal, clear of all expenses, is, say Rs. 7,000. Rs. 2,000 to be expended on a substantial tomb over Sir William Peel's grave at Cawnpore; the remainder on a monument to be erected in the parish church adjoining Sir William Peel's estate in England. Sir William Peel's family have already provided a statue, which they proposed to forward to Calcutta to be erected under the superintendence of the committee, at such place as they may consider most suitable, and the committee propose to place it in the cathedral at Calcutta.

MAHARAJAH OF CHIRKAREE.—At the durbar held by the Viceroy at Cawnpore on the 3rd Nov., the Maharajah of Chirkaree received a khillut of the value of Rs. 20,000, the pergunnah of Futtehpore in perpetuity, and the honour of an hereditary salute of eleven guns. A notification in the Calcutta Gazette states:—The distinguished services of this chief, who not only adhered firmly to his alliance with the British Government throughout the rebellion, but rendered active assistance to the Queen's troops, and protected the lives of her Majesty's Christian subjects at the imminent and un concealed peril of his own, and to his own great loss, were on that occasion publicly acknowledged by the Viceroy and Governor-general. His Excellency was pleased to call the notice of the Commander-in-Chief and of the assembly to the signal devotion shown by the Maharajah to the Queen's Government in his offer to surrender to the rebels the person of his own son rather than that of a British agent who was under his protection; and his Excellency enjoined all British officers who might hereafter enter the territory of the Maharajah to remember these services, and to render to his highness the respect and consideration which he so eminently deserves.

THE MEERUT REVOLT.—The New Times publishes some interesting papers on the Meerut revolt, being a memorandum by Major Williams, Commissioner of Military Police, North-West Provinces. The Commissioner in his official capacity investigated the proceedings of the Meerut Police on the night of the outbreak. It would seem, from these papers, that the Meerut sepoys were not generally aware that there was to be a mutiny on the 10th May; but, on the other hand, it appears that some plot to bring about such an occurrence was hatched beforehand. The immediate cause of the outbreak is said to have been the arrival in the Sepoy Bazaar of a cookboy of the Rifles, with the story that that corps and the Artillery were under arms to march down on the Native Infantry lines, to disarm the native soldiers. This fable was supported by a sowar who said he had just left the Artillery lines, where he had seen the Europeans getting ready. The probability is that both the cookboy and sowar were the agents of those who sought by any means to bring about a revolt.

SUB-ASSISTANT SURGEONS.—The following are extracts of a letter dated the 1st October last, from the Secretary to the Government of India to the officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, on the subject of granting pensions to Sub-Assistant Surgeons:—"By a recent despatch from the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India (No. 12, dated the 11th August, 1859), his Excellency in Council is pleased to sanction that Sub-Assistant Surgeons will henceforth be entitled to pensions under the rules applicable to the general uncovenanted service. The Governor-general in Council is further pleased to sanction the adoption of Dr. Forsyth's suggestion for remunerating Sub-Assistant Surgeons placed in independent charges usually held by covenanted medical officers, by the grant of an additional allowance of Rs. 150 or Rs. 100 a month, according to the class to which they may belong."

THE EX-KING OF OUDE'S PENSION of twelve lakhs is to commence from the date on which he agreed to accept the offer of Government, and not from the date of the annexation of his territory. The sum of Rs. 3,74,000, the amount of the arrears of his pension, has paid to the King.

THE EX-KING OF OUDE.—Our special correspondent informs us that a great fire broke out in the residence occupied by his Majesty at Garden Reach, and destroyed the greater part of the royal wardrobe. His Majesty, immediately after the extent of destruction was ascertained, left by rail for Burdwan, to share the hospitalities of the Rajah of that place. The Rajah of Burdwan is decidedly the favourite of the day in English circles. He is English in dress, habits, language, and in fact almost in everything but dancing, in which he would beat the best French masters.—Lucknow Herald.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.—We hear from the Governor-general's camp, that Colonel Yule has brought out the final orders (to have effect from the 1st January next) for the appointment of a secretary in the department of Public Works, to all Lieutenant-governors; the present office of Chief Engineer being abolished. One central office of account and audit for the department Public Works is to be formed instead of half a dozen, from the 1st January next.

QUID PRO QUO.—The amount of Nuzzerana received by the Viceroy in his Lucknow durbars is said to be 4,582 gold mohurs (about £7,330). The value of the khillats presented was considerably greater.

OUDE NEWS.—A letter from Barraitch says that, Rs. 5,000 per annum have been settled on the Ranees of Chalairee by Government, who has taken over her illaka in lieu thereof; also that Raja Kulraj Sing of Churda has been deprived of his jaghire, on account of some hand that he had in seizing the European prisoners from Dhourara. The dewan of Raj Jodh Sing, his son, and two others, have been confined for uttering forged documents. The Nanpara treasure has been proved to have been plundered by Raja Jung Bahadoor Khan, the talookdar of that place, and he has accordingly been called upon to refund the money, some Rs. 22,000. The raja is said to have been a mere child at the time, and that Kullian Khan was the manager of his estate, and the real offender. Government will, of course, take the amount from the revenues for the illaka. Another murder has been committed in the Barraitch districts. It appears that an old woman, who trespassed on the fields of a Brahmin, had been so roughly handled by him, that she died from the effects of the ill-treatment. The man has decamped, and the police are after him.—Oude Gazette.

THE OUDE COMMISSION.—There have been a few changes of late in the Oude Commission. Mr. Assistant-Commissioner King has been appointed Assistant-Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Oude, Mr. Extra-Assistant Commissioner Berkley to succeed him as Assistant-Commissioner of Lucknow, being in turn relieved at Hurdah by Extra-Assistant Nundkishore, of Roy Bareilly. We learn that Mr. Forsyth, the Secretary, has been appointed Commissioner of Hissar, Mr. Currie being appointed to succeed him. Lieut.-Col. L. Barrow is, pro tem., the Compensation-Commissioner, his substantive place being Assistant Resident of Hyderabad. Mr. W. Capper, Deputy-Commissioner of Roy Bareilly, is on twenty days' leave on urgent private affairs. Mr. Assistant-Commissioner Glynn conducts his duties.—Commercial Gazette.

SAGOR DISTRICT, Nov. 2nd.—Operations are being vigorously carried on against the rebels by the several columns out against them. Small parties under native officers are sent in all directions in the jungle, and a continuous line of communication is thus maintained over a large expanse of territory, which cannot fail to have the desired effect of driving the rebels very shortly out of this district at all events. Small posts are rapidly being formed at such places as are necessary and in the vicinity of the Baghee's haunts, so that the wretches hardly know which way to turn to escape our troops. A column from Jhansi arrived the other day under Colonel Lockhart, composed of two companies of the 92nd highlanders, and 500 of the 12th Punjab infantry. Although the rebels, now that they are being so unceremoniously disturbed, turn out to be by no means so numerous as was expected; nevertheless, from the small bodies they are divided into, require a large force to utterly and quickly eradicate them from the secret haunts in the recesses of the thick jungles which it delighteth them to inhabit; this is being done well and rapidly. The rebels, by all accounts, are very much alarmed and surprised at our activity, and cannot imagine what recent act they have committed that they are now so cruelly forced to evacuate the comfortable "snuggeries" they have erected during our long and patient sufferance of their existence. The Sikhs enter into the sport with great zest, expecting, no doubt, to find loot to reward them. European troops are quite thrown away on such work as the present, which cannot be better or more effectually accomplished than by natives under smart, young, and active commandants. As yet nothing material has resulted from these operations, although several rebels have been caught and killed. The heads of villages should be made examples of, as many of them are well known to have assisted the rebels with provisions, &c., but for which underhand sympathy the rebels would never have been able to exist in these jungles so long. By all accounts they are very inefficiently armed, and their ammunition is chiefly of native manufacture. They hardly possess any cavalry or horses, and are miserably off in every respect. They generally fly immediately on our approach, or keep up a desultory fusillade from some eminence which is abandoned directly they see our troops ascending. They frequently abandon those of their comrades of both sexes, who, from old age or sickness, are unable to keep up with them in their hurried wanderings and sudden surprises. Such heartless conduct can only be expected from creatures who never extended any mercy to those victims who fell into their hands during their brief enjoyment of power. Although we may drive out the rebels with our troops, yet, in the opinion of those who are competent to judge, a lasting good will not have been done to this harassed province, until a good and efficient police is established, with active and intelligent officers. The duty of these should be to keep a constant watch on the acts of all residing in their respective districts, causing suspicious characters to be instantly apprehended, and making every man account for his absence from his village in a satisfactory manner. The Oude police has worked well, why should not a Bundelcund one do the same?—Delhi Gazette.

CANPORE MEMORIAL CHURCH.—We call attention to the annexed letter, addressed by the Viceroy to Sir John Inglis, as chairman of the meeting which was held at Canpore in August last, with reference to the proposed Memorial Church. Lord Canning has subscribed the sum of Rs. 2,500 to the fund, and Lady Canning has put down her name for a further sum of Rs. 1,000. "From his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-general of India, &c., &c., to Major-general Sir John Inglis, K.C.B., &c., &c. Dated Camp Buntheera, October 20, 1859. Dear Sir John Inglis,—I have delayed to answer your letter of the 26th of August until I had availed myself of the opportunity which was then before me of revisiting Canpore, and also of communicating with the Lieutenant-governor of the North-West Province within whose immediate authority that station lies. This I have done within the last few days. I entirely and heartily concur in the scheme of a Memorial Church which has been put forward by the committee whose proceedings you were good enough to send to me. I am glad that the proposal to build a church for the use of native Christians exclusively has given place to that which the committee advocate. The objections which I should have felt to the former proposal are very strong; but it is no longer necessary to discuss them. I think, too, that a church of suitable dimensions at Canpore will be a far more appropriate memorial of those who fell in the terrible calamity, of which that station was the scene, than any building of greater pretensions at the seat of the local Government. It is in the essence of such a memorial that it should not be placed at a distance from Canpore. It is true that Canpore, as a military station, has no longer the importance which belonged to it when it stood upon the frontier of our territory; but it is quite important enough, and quite large enough to warrant the erection of a new church for the use of the garrison and the residents. A site shall be given upon the ground at the disposal of the Government. I incline to think, with you, that the vicinity of Wheeler's entrenchment will be a suitable position, but this shall be further considered, and the site determined, and marked out upon my return to Canpore next month. The committee are right in assuming that the Government had undertaken to raise a monument over the well into which the bodies of the women and children, murdered on the 15th July, 1857, were thrown. The ground round the well will be made a garden, and carefully tended. The designs for the monument are in progress. No edifice but one of small size and elevation, and certainly no church, could conveniently be erected so close to the glacis of the present entrenchment. Aid in money from the Government will be forthcoming, if needed, for the building of the church proposed by the committee, but before saying to what extent it will be supplied, I shall be glad to have some indication of how far the scheme is acceptable to the public, and to those in India and in England to whose feelings it is especially designed to give expression. It appears to be more fitting, and, I believe, that to many it will be more satisfactory, that the scheme should retain the character of being, mainly, a private rather than a Governmental one; but if the amount of subscription shall show that the plan is generally approved, it shall not fall through for want of a subsidy from the Government.—I am, &c., CANNING."—Delhi Gazette.

CAMP, DERARA, Nov. 8.—"As you may be anxious to know what we are doing in the Punnah field force, I take the opportunity of the hawk leaving to-day to give you some of the particulars of the proceedings of No. 2, or Colonel Turner's column, in the last few days. On the 3rd we were at the village of Palkon, and information having been received that the rebels were in full flight towards the Jogung jungles, we started at twelve noon, and marched till dark; on the 4th and 5th we marched from sunrise till sunset, halting at eight a.m. for breakfast; on the evening of the 5th we found ourselves at the village of Bomora, situated about three miles in the Kalee Nuddee, having marched seventy-one miles in twenty-four hours and a half. A party of H.M.'s 97th regiment, under Captain Annesley, and the 22nd Punjab infantry, under Major Robertson, the whole led by Colonel Turner, started to make a night surprise. After very hard work, scrambling on our hands and knees through thick jungle and deep ravines, and wading through water, we found our friends sitting by their fires, closely surrounded by jungle on the bank of the Kalee Nuddee about half past seven p.m.; so little did they anticipate our approach, and so cautious was that approach, that they never moved till a volley was poured into them; a close pursuit followed, Sikhs and Europeans vying with one another to be in advance; from the dense state of the jungle it is impossible to estimate the enemy's loss, but fifteen dead bodies were found, and it is calculated at least twenty-five must have fallen; eleven horses were taken, 107 stand of arms, consisting of percussion muskets, matchlocks, bayonets, spears, tulwars, cavalry swords and pouches. Amongst the latter a native officer's pouch and belt of the Governor-general's body-guard. On the following morning we found a wounded sepoy of the Light Company 11th Native Infantry, who identified one of the dead bodies as the colonel of their party, and two other as subadars. Among the prisoners taken in the neighbouring village are the brother, uncle, and nephew of Ammer Sing, and a sepoy identified as having killed a fugitive from Nowgong.—Delhi Gazette.

LIEUT. O. M. GLUBB, cantonment joint magistrate of Allahabad, has been appointed assistant to Lieut.-colonel Williams, secretary to Government military department, and commissioner of police N. W. P., in the room of Capt. L. P. Faddy, permitted to resign the appointment, at his own request, and he accordingly entered on the duties of his new office on the 26th Oct.

THE N. W. BANK.—We hear from Calcutta that the winding-up manager of the North-Western Bank, understanding it to be the general wish of the proprietors that a dividend should be made without loss of time, and not thinking it prudent to divide Rs. 100 per share just now, owing to legal proceedings in which the bank is engaged respecting the produce of the indigo factories sold by the late management, and the unavoidable delay in getting out funds from England, he proposes to pay a dividend of Rs. 50 per share in cash on the 1st of December. Notice is given to all depositors to withdraw their balances of account, the floating ones at once; and the fixed ones on the 1st of January. Since taking charge of the bank Mr. Fergusson has collected about Rs. 25,000 due by sundry debtors to the bank, and has paid to depositors about Rs. 20,000. The Putterghaut Indigo concern in Purneah has been sold for Rs. 10,000, its utmost value. The agency at Mussoorie (which is the last in existence) was to be closed on the 19th of November. To meet the wish of many shareholders Mr. Fergusson endeavoured to divide Government paper among them instead of cash, but after every effort he found it impracticable.

BENARES, November 12th.—The Bishop of Calcutta and Mrs. Cotton arrived here on Tuesday last, and will leave on the 15th. The confirmation takes place to-day, and he will preach for the Mission to-morrow. The general has been on a tour of inspection, from which he has just returned under a salute of thirteen guns. Did you hear that the Rewah Rajah, who refused to go to the Viceroy's durbar, is to be called to account for this misdemeanour and several others, such as sheltering rebels, &c.; and a party of Sikhs and Police, and the Magistrate of Chunar, are to leave at once for his fort near the Soane and bring him to a proper spirit of loyalty. Amongst other gup, it is reported that on the evening on which the death of the Rajah of Coorg was announced, his favourite sultana here poisoned herself; the Civil Surgeon of this place used his utmost endeavours to apply the stomach-pump; but all was in vain: another of his wives has followed the example of the favourite.

CAMP SEPREE, Nov. 18.—About two days ago information was received by the authorities of some suspicious characters here, who met in solemn conclave every night in a retired locality, and one of whom was seen going out towards the jungle every morning in a certain direction. That very night the officer in command of the station, with a small number of men, surprised the rascals in the midst of their deliberations. They were apparently conducting a debate, while one was standing, giving a deposition. This man was employed under the contractor who is building a new telegraph-office here, and appeared to have been going round in collecting information for the members of the secret committee, under the plausible pretext of being the contractor's man. Eight men were taken at the meeting; a subadar, a havildar, and another havildar of one of the native regiments that had mutinied. It is supposed that these men were chiefs from Feroz-sha's camp, and had settled here to watch our movements. It is fortunate that the last column ordered out had not left, or else, many persons are of opinion, Sepree would have been a scene of rather unpleasant consequences. However, the evil designers are now safe in custody; and it is hoped the authorities will deal with them according to their deserts, and be on the look-out for more stragglers. Detachments of H. M.'s 92nd Highlanders are to proceed to Jhansi to join their head-quarters, on being relieved by the 83th, who are expected to be here to-morrow. Weather cool and pleasant; N. E. winds; and sky cloudy for the last few days.—Bombay Times.

JHANSI, Nov. 10.—General Sir Robert Napier, Staff, and 16th Irregulars arrived at Jhansi on the 7th. There was a levee on the 8th. There is no order for the move of the 3rd Bombay Cavalry, and the absence of such an order has occasioned much annoyance and disappointment to both officers and men; it is moreover a very great hardship, for the regiment was a year in Persia before it was ordered to Central India. The squadron of the 17th Lancers will return to Morar on Monday, the 14th. No news of the rebels—in fact, as long as the 3rd Bombay Cavalry remains at Jansi, they will not show their faces.

CAPTURE OF A REBEL LEADER.—We hear from a private source that in the beginning of this month a party of the troops on the frontier, that are commanded by Major Renny, were so fortunate as to capture a brahmin of the name of Marbeer Sing; he is a well-known leader and dacoit amongst the rebels, and was trying to pass between the military posts on the frontier with two or three attendants. He is a native of the Bustee district, and joined the Begum on her retreat to Nepal; he soon afterwards set up for himself and collected a band of budmashes, sowars, and sepoys, that often numbered upwards of a hundred men; with these followers he plundered both the Goorkha and Goruckpore villages, pretty evenly as it appears from his own confession. He seems to have been pretty successful in his predatory expeditions, cutting off the usual average of noses, committing a few murders, and torturing the villagers to extort money, until he one day ordered a Brahmin to be beaten to death, at which unheard-of piece of cruelty the Hindostani sepoys took affront, and his band of robbers was so much reduced that he in return was attacked and plundered by another rebel band commanded by a man called Bene Pandey, under orders from the Begum, and at the instigation of the Nepaul authorities; the latter becoming rather disgusted at his ingratitude in plundering their people. The rebels seem to believe that the Goorkha army is to join with them, and it is the expectation of this assistance that prevents the dispersion of their bands. They look towards the Begum still as their political head, and in some measure obey her orders. Ummer Sing, old Koer Sing's nephew, is encamped with a small force at the entrance of the Seraike Sota, but the larger number of rebels are still beyond that pass in the Dhang and Deokur valley.—Englishman.

FUTTEHPORE, Nov. 13.—I have the pleasure to inform you that His Excellency the Governor-General of India and the Commander-in-Chief arrived at this station yesterday morning. The Viceroy was received under a salute of nineteen guns. They have encamped at the Luckpeera Bagh, and a station levee of all the civil and military officers of this station was held last evening; after that they had a dinner party at the Viceroy's camp. The Nawab of Rampore came in this morning under a salute of eleven guns. The Rajas of Cashipore, Powaeen, Kasgini, and many other native chiefs, are waiting to attend the durbar, which comes off to-morrow evening.

OPERATIONS IN NEPAUL.—The cold weather campaign in Nepaul has commenced. The right wing of H.M.'s 54th has crossed the Gogra at Ajoodhia, and has proceeded to Utrowlia on the southern frontier of Nepaul. The districts south of the hills are, of course, fully in our possession; and in a short time we hope to hear that all the principal outposts along the frontier are occupied by our troops. With these in our hands, the enemy's chief sources of supply, both of ammunition and of food, will be cut off; the means of communication with the main land will be taken from them; and an approach will be made towards blockading them in the valleys where they are now encamped, threatening their base of operations in the rear, and reducing them by the double action of the sword and famine. If the Nepaulese troops should advance from Khatmandu, the rebels will be menaced in another direction, will be still further distracted, and called upon to cope with dangers on every side. And, indeed, it is evident that they are already greatly disheartened. We read that their attacks have recently been made with an unusual languor,—accounts which are confirmed by the spiritless way in which they retired from a place called Betwa or Karia, where they recently had a skirmish with a detachment of mounted police under Lieutenant Rhoddy. They fought for a short time, and then bolted into the jungle; a few who did try the open ground found that they had gone in the wrong direction, for they were immediately cut up by the sowars. The police killed over twenty of the rebels, and burnt down a new camp they had just erected. This engagement was unchequered by any casualties on our side, and has had the effect of dislodging a good many of the rebels from a position they might have occupied for some time.

A PATENT has been secured for a new traction engine to run on common roads, the invention of Baboo Moodoosuddun Pyne, an employé in the office of the collector at Midnapore.

THE BETHUNE SCHOOL.—The public, particularly the English portion of it, is, we apprehend, not aware of the progress of female education among the natives. We are glad to be able to say that the Bethune school founded by the late Mr. Bethune for the education of Hindoo girls, is prospering. A short time before her departure from Calcutta, the Countess Canning presided at the distribution of prizes to the pupils of the institution, and expressed herself highly delighted with the progress made by them. Her ladyship presented to the best girl of the institution, a gold Turkish ear-ring, given for the purpose by Ranees Surnomoey, widow of the late Rajah Kistonath Roy.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HYDERABAD, Nov. 9.—The body of Rohillas, after plundering Setasepet, moved in the direction of Jowla, which they also plundered. What they may have plundered intermediately I do not know, but it cannot be supposed that forbearance was practised during their march from the one place to the other, or any opportunity of committing depredations neglected. But people have become so habituated to the marauding excursions of banditti, that the plunder and destruction of small places, and the passing highway robberies, are not considered worth noticing; I doubt whether they are even reported to the Government. A detachment of the Contingent under Major Abbott moved out against them from Hingolee. It followed them to Guntoor, known to be one of the locations of the Rohillas, to which they had gone. Here all traces of them were lost. The people of the place would give no information. Major Abbott divided his detachment into four parties, and, following them into the neighbouring mountains and jungles, had a regular battle to drive them out of their lairs. He came up to them in a gorge, where he defeated and dispersed them; twenty dead bodies were counted by him on the field. The number of their wounded is not known. On the side of the Contingent one horseman was killed, two horsemen and a naigue of infantry wounded. If the Nizam's district officers did their duty and exercised a little vigilance, not a man of this band or of any other to be broken up should escape. But the district officers are not loyal. They prefer anything to their government, the friend of the English, and as to exercising vigilance, that is too troublesome for an Indian who can retain his service, and subsist equally well without the trouble of it.—Athenaeum.

POSTINGS.—The Fort St. George Gazette of the 15th Nov. cancels the postings to regiments of two cornets and twenty-one ensigns. This is a carrying out of the instructions contained in Sir Charles Wood's despatch of the 30th September last, in which it was directed that the postings of officers who had been appointed to the service since December last should be cancelled, and that they should be transferred to general lists, in which they are to rank according to the dates of their respective commissions.—Athenaeum, Nov. 17.

MADRAS LOYALTY.—Wednesday, the 9th Nov., was observed as a public holiday at Madras, all offices and places of business being closed, and a royal salute was fired from the Fort at noon, in celebration both of the anniversary of the Queen's proclamation last year, and of the coming of age of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales.

GAS.—Madras was illuminated with gas on Monday, the 21st Nov. At a dramatic performance by the amateurs of H.M.'s 44th Regiment, on that evening, the theatre of the regiment was brilliantly illuminated with gas, being the inauguration of that light in the "benighted" city.

BEATSON'S HORSE.—With the concurrence of the Right Honourable the Governor-general, the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to alter the present organisation of "Beatson's Horse," and to direct that the two regiments composing it shall be placed on a precisely similar footing to other corps of irregular cavalry, with effect from the date of departure of Colonel W. F. Beatson on leave to Europe.

BOMBAY.

DWARKA.—According to the latest advices all was quiet at Dwarka. The force sent in pursuit of the Wahgers had come up with them, and killed many, but no particulars were known. The remnant retreated to the Burda hills. The force returned to Dwarka, awaiting further orders. There are at Dwarka H.M.'s 33rd regiment, and the 6th B.N.I.

THE DECCAN.—The rebel Bheel Naik Bhagojee, the murderer of the late Captain Henry, has at last paid the penalty of his rebellion, as will be seen by the following telegram:—By telegraph from Meetasager, 11th November, from F. Souter, Esq., superintendent of police in Khandeish, to A. Bettington, Esq., commissioner of police. I have the pleasure to report that I came up with the rebel Bheels under Bhagojee Naik at noon this day, and succeeded in shooting and cutting up the gang to a man. Fifty-one bodies were counted on the ground. The Bheels and Arabs composing the gang fought with great obstinacy, and I regret to say that this service has not been performed without loss: a jemadar, two sepoy, and a sowar of the police killed, several men and horses wounded. My own horse fell under me pierced with three shots. I now start to hang Bhagojee Naik at Nandoosingoba, the spot where Captain Henry was murdered.

BOMBAY PRESS.—From the 1st of January the Bombay Times and the Standard will immerse into the Bombay Times and Standard, which is to be "the organ of no party," and to "reflect the prejudices of no race."

H.M.'S 14TH DRAGOONS.—The Poona Observer learns, on excellent authority, that orders have arrived for H.M.'s 14th light dragoons to embark for England as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made.

THE RETRENCHMENT COMMITTEE.—A Calcutta contemporary is informed that the retrenchment committee, of which Colonel Jameson, the Military auditor general at Bombay, is president, has sent in a report to Government to the effect that savings in the military expenditure in the Bombay presidency alone can be effected to the extent of one million per annum. Our contemporary is assured that the saving will be effected to a great extent by an assimilation of the rates of commissariat and other expenditure to those of Bengal. The report has, it is said, been forwarded to heads of departments.

AMALGAMATION OF THE SUDDER AND THE SUPREME COURTS.—We understand that Mr. Le Geyt, the Bombay Member of the Legislative Council of India, who is at present enjoying his vacation in Bombay, has had a consultation with the judges of the Sudder Adawlat in reference to the amalgamation of the Sudder Court and H.M.'s Supreme Court, for which purpose a draft bill has already been prepared. We believe the draft bill will be laid before the Council as soon as the reports of the respective courts are obtained with regard to the mode of working the establishment.

MAJOR R. SHAW, assistant commissary general, is appointed acting auditor of commissariat accounts, and acting superintendent of army clothing, from the date of Major Mylne's departure to Europe.

CAPT. E. THOMPSON.—The Governor-general is pleased to appoint Captain E. Thompson, 8th Bombay native infantry, to officiate as Political Assistant at Nimar, from the 2nd October.

MR. J. E. C. PRYCE has been appointed deputy registrar of shipping, and surveyor of the Port of Bombay, from the 1st Nov.

INDIAN NAVY.—The Master Attendant and Conservator of the port having been relieved from all duties connected with the dockyard and Indian navy, the following officers have been appointed to conduct the duties relinquished by the Master Attendant's department, one of whom will be ex-officio agent for transports:—Captain Young to be dock master, in addition to his duties as assistant superintendent Indian navy. Lieutenant Nixon to be 1st assistant dock master. Acting Master Kennelly to be 2nd assistant dock master, and agent for transports.

OFFICIAL APPOINTMENTS.—The Right Honourable the Governor in Council has been pleased to make the following appointments:—Mr. M. A. Coxon to be judge and session judge of Dharwar. Mr. H. Newton to be registrar to the Sudder Dewanee and Sudder Foujdaree Adawlut. Mr. R. White to be acting assistant judge and session judge of Surat.

BOMBAY MISSIONS.—The London Missionary Society have made over the Mahi Kantha mission to the Irish Presbyterian Church. We have been aware for some time that the London Missionary Society, considering it an error in missionary policy to have isolated and widely-separated missions, with only one or two labourers in each, contemplated abandoning their Guzerat mission. Happily the Board of Missions of the Irish Presbyterian Church have agreed to purchase the mission premises and occupy the field. We understand that there is a prospect that the Rev. Joseph Taylor, of the mission now abandoned, will come out shortly to occupy his old station in connection with the Irish Church. There is also a prospect that the important station of Ahmedabad will be occupied by the Irish mission. —Guardian.

THE ASSAULT ON BEYT.—Captain Nasmyth, field engineer to the Okhamandel field force, has published a letter in the Bombay Times to correct certain false reports relative to the unsuccessful assault upon the fort of Beyt, from which we take the following extract:—The height of the wall to the top of the parapet on the face selected for escalade varied from 19½ to 21 feet, and at the extreme end 24 feet; there was a hole at the point chosen knocked through the parapet at 17 feet from the ground, and a gap beyond it at 16 feet from the ground. The ladders, as they were carried forward, were as follows:—2 pieces, 36 feet long; 2 ditto 27 ditto; 4 ditto 24 ditto. They were therefore not too short. A mistake is made in speaking of a breach, for such, it was very well known, had not been effected.

MORTUARY REPORT.—Dr. Leith has published his 11th Mortuary Report of Bombay for the year ending February last. As compared with 1857 there was a decrease in the number of deaths of 3,182, and of this decrease 1,084 were from the epidemic classes, cholera, measles, and small pox. The health of the island was superior to its mean during the last ten years. More than half the mortality, or 7,353 cases, is ascribed to fever, which speaks much for the bad drainage and general sanitary state of Bombay. Like Calcutta, Bombay has no reliable census. The population in 1849 was estimated at 566,119, of whom pure Europeans numbered 5,088; Indo-Britons, 1,333; Indo-Portuguese, 5,417; native Christians, 7,456; Jews, 1,132; Parsees, 114,098. The total number of reported deaths was 14,363. In the same year 14,883 natives died in Calcutta and 1,701 Europeans, including seamen and soldiers. Without these the deaths were only 672. In May, 1850, an incorrect census of Calcutta showed the population to number 413,182, of whom were—Europeans, 6,233; Eurasians, 4,615; Armenians, 892; Chinese, 847. Taking these figures as approximately correct, Calcutta is less populous and less healthy than Bombay and Colaba. Its trade is now also less by three millions sterling.

THE INLAND STEAM NAVIGATION TRAINS are allowed an extension of time to prove that the perseverance, talent, anxiety of mind, and money expended on their construction have not been thrown away. We trust they will yet be found available for the river Indus.

LORD ELPHINSTONE gave an entertainment at Matheran on the evening of Monday, the 14th Nov., to Sir Bartle and Lady Frere, prior to their departure for Calcutta, to which all the elite of Bombay and Poona society were invited to meet his distinguished guests.

MR. JOHN MAHAN, police constable at Mahim, has been presented with a testimonial by the inhabitants of that district, on his leaving Bombay for England. Mr. Forjett, Superintendent of Police, has testified to his having always had a high opinion of Mr. Mahan's value as a public servant.

MILITARY RETRENCHMENTS.—A contemporary has heard that the Military Finance Commission have recommended retrenchments in the military expenditure of this Presidency to the extent of one million per annum. The Commissioners are to remain at Madras for about three months, and to proceed to Calcutta. If a saving of three or four millions can be effected by merely reducing the commissariat charges, the deficit question is more than half answered.

THE CHINA EXPEDITION.—The Bombay Government have chartered the P. and O. S. N. Co.'s steamers Oriental and Pottinger for the conveyance of troops from Madras to China. They left for Madras on the 25th Nov.

RETURN OF THE OKHAMUNDEL EXPEDITION.—H.M.'s I.N. steamers Ferooz and Zenobia arrived in Bombay from Dwarka on the evening of the 13th Nov., the former having in tow the ship Empress of India, and the latter three buggalows loaded with war stores. The steamers and transport brought Colonel Scobie, Lieut. Colonel Donovan, about 30 officers, and detachments of the royal artillery, 28th foot, and marine battalion, with a number of lascars and followers. All was quiet at Dwarka, the Waghers having retreated to the Burda hills, and our whole fleet and forces were withdrawn, with the exception of the sappers and miners and 6th regiment N.I., which were left at Dwarka.

FUND FOR THE SUFFERERS IN BEYT.—The inhabitants of Beyt having been reduced to great sufferings by the plunder of all their property by the Waghers and the British troops, and many of them brought to starvation, a subscription list has been opened by the Hindoos for the relief of the poor sufferers. It is said that a fund for the purpose has been raised in Cutch Mandevie to the extent of about Rs. 25,000. The Rao of Cutch and the Jam of Nuggur have come forward with liberal contributions.

ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—Direct telegraphic communication between Calcutta and Bombay was opened on the 15th Nov. through Benares, Agra, and Indore. The line worked most satisfactorily. Bombay is also in direct communication with Kurrachee.

CAPTAIN GEORGE M. BEYTS, commander of the B.S.N. Co.'s steamer Scindian, on the high recommendation of Lieutenant-general Sir James Outram, G.C.B., Bart., and Sir Edward Lugard, K.C.B., supported by the Government of Bombay, has been granted by her Majesty's Secretary of State for India a medal for Persia. This gentleman's vessel was open to severe fire during the attack on Mohumra, when a man was killed in action on board the steamer, and it is on this account he has been granted the medal. This is the first instance we have on record of a gentleman unconnected with the Government service having received a medal, and we congratulate Captain Beyts on the honour that has been conferred upon him by her Majesty's Government.

CAVALRY BRIGADE AT KIRKEE.—H.E. the Commander-in-Chief, on Thursday morning last, inspected the cavalry brigade at Kirkee. The troops, consisting of the 6th Inniskilling dragoons and the 14th light dragoons, with four guns of Gaye's troop of horse artillery, paraded in drill order, and went through, in splendid style, the usual parade and field movements, much to the credit of the Inniskillingers, who, considering that they are now only a little more than a twelvemonth in India, are entirely drilled and mounted, and fit for active service. It was to ascertain this, we believe, that the parade was especially ordered. On the conclusion of the manoeuvres, H.E. ordered the 14th dragoons to form up, and in a very eloquent speech congratulated them on the brilliant services rendered by them to the State, and to British India, and told them the gladdening news that they might now prepare to return to England, and that as soon as shipping can be procured they will proceed to the Presidency, and from thence embark. Several of the men, we hear, are anxious to volunteer to other corps in India. Their wish, we hope, may be granted them, for it is not always that the Government will meet with such tried and glorious soldiers as those of the gallant 14th light dragoons.—Poona Observer.

EXPORTS (Bombay, Nov. 26.)—Cotton.—Demand is very brisk, and prices have advanced. Stocks are generally cleared away as soon as they reach the market. A very large supply was lately expected, however, which will be sufficient to meet the growing demand. A fair amount of business has been done for the China market. Wool.—There is more activity at present, and large purchases have been made at higher prices by native shippers. Supplies are coming in freely. Oil Seeds.—A change may at length be reported in the tone of this market. There is an active inquiry for Linseed, but no actual advance in price has taken place, owing to the supplies being liberal. There is a slightly improved inquiry for Rapeseed, and prices are firm. Teel Seed is dull. Hemp.—There is a demand for local consumption only. Coffee.—Mocha is scarce, and still maintains a high value. Malabar is in moderate stock, at our quotations. Pepper.—Neglected. Madder Root.—In little inquiry at present prices. Opium.—The market continues easy. Prices rule to-day at Rs. 1,320 per chest. During the past fortnight the steamers Pekin and Bombay Castle carried respectively 650 and 1,400 chests of opium to China.

Imports (Bombay, Nov. 26).—Imports have suffered a general depression, in consequence of the large arrivals of Piece Goods and Twist, which have glutted the market. There is very little disposition to make purchases, and the demand from up-country having also declined, the business transacted during the fortnight has been but small, and the market now closes rather dull. Cotton Manufactures.—The increase of stocks and the heavy supplies offering have caused a decline in the prices of Piece Goods. There is at present little or no demand, and holders are anxious to sell at a considerable concession of prices. Grey Goods of almost all descriptions are quoted lower. Bleached Goods of common to middling kinds are in fair inquiry at our quotations. Glasgow Goods are in moderate inquiry. Turkey Red Goods are still further depressed. Yarns.—The arrival of heavy supplies has checked business to a great extent, and the market closes dull. Mule and Water Twist have receded in price, and only a small amount of business has been transacted. Dyed Yarns are quiet. Thread is in demand, and has advanced in price. Metals.—Copper is firm, with the exception of Braziers, which have improved in demand, and are quoted higher. Iron is also firm, and British Bar shows an advance in value. Spelter has declined. Tin Plates are dull, as also Lead. Other metals are steady and quiet. Saffron.—Scarce, and commands high prices. Beer.—Beer in a wood is dull, while that in bottle is in fair inquiry. 20 lbs. Beer at Rs. 55.

Camp Oonao, Oct. 31.—No. 9.—In consideration of the difficulty of relieving at once all the officers holding staff and detached appointments who may fail to pass in the native languages on the 19th Nov. next, under the G. O. No. 734, dated 20th May. H.E. the Gov. gen., in order to prevent inconvenience to the public service, is pleased to determine that such unpassed officers shall, after the 19th proximo, retain their respective appointments as "officiating," and shall receive the usual salaries, but only until it is found practicable to relieve them. In no other respect is the G. O. No. 734 affected by this order.

Option of Enlistment for China.

Military Dept., Camp, Bunterrah, Oct. 29.—No. 7.—With reference to G. O. by H. E. the Gov. general, dated Oct. 12, it is hereby announced that the option of enlistment for H.M.'s troops in China, or proceeding there, is to be allowed to the men of the local forces who have taken their discharge, without reference to their having applied for discharge before or after the issue of the G. O. No. 883, of the 20th of June, 1859. Only those are to be excluded from enlistment who have committed any act of insubordination connected with the subject of discharge.

The bounty of Rs. (50) fifty to men enlisting for ten years' service in H.M.'s corps in China, or proceeding thither, is to be paid on their enlistment, and a fresh kit will be issued to them.

It is hereby notified for general information, that the rate of bounty now offered to time-expired and other discharged men of the line, is offered to them under the special circumstances of the service in China now about to take place; and that the grant of this rate will not in any way affect the rate issuable to men who may hereafter renew their service under ordinary circumstances in H.M.'s army.

Discharged men of the local forces re-enlisting as above, will not be allowed to reckon their former service in the local forces.

Time-expired men of H.M.'s regiments serving in India who have taken their discharge, and men who have obtained discharge by indulgence, are invited to re-enlist according to the terms of the Act of Parliament of 1847, for limiting the time of service in the army, as respects their service, in H.M.'s infantry regiments, or artillery, or marine, serving in China or proceeding there; and they will, on so re-enlisting, receive a bounty of Rs. 50. They will reckon their former service if they claim it on re-enlistment; and each man will receive a fresh kit.

Administration of Oude.

No. 2,396.

From the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Oude to the Secretary to the Government of India, with the Governor-general.

Foreign Department, dated Lucknow, October 24, 1859.

Sir,—I am directed to observe that H. E. the Right Hon. the Governor-general will have learnt from a memo the chief commissioner had the honour of submitting for his perusal, that it has been the chief commissioner's constant endeavour, within the compass of his authority, to accommodate the forms and procedure of revenue administration in force in the North-Western Provinces to the different system on which the settlement of the land revenue of Oude is based. The close control and frequent interference of the revenue authorities which may be suitable where peasant proprietors enter into direct engagements with the State, are not so well adapted for Oude, where three-fourths of the revenue are paid by great landholders of ancient lineage. These restrictions are also new to the talooqdars, who, under the native Government, were vested with absolute power within the limits of their estates. That Government, which was incessantly engaged in coercing some refractory talooqdar or other, never thought of interfering between him and those under him.

2. The feature of our administration that is viewed with most dislike by the talooqdars is the subordination under which it places them to the tehseeldars, or local revenue officials, not merely because such subordination lowers their position and wounds their pride, but also because it tends to foster a spirit of litigiousness and disrespect in their tenantry; loss of power and of the respect of his inferiors are what a native of rank feels most acutely. In great measure this result is unavoidable; we cannot perpetuate the old state of things, but, though we cannot avert, we can soften the blow.

3. It is also a frequent apology for the indolence and insouciance of the talooqdars, and for their habit of resigning the care of their estates to corrupt agents, that we, by adjudicating in every difference between them and their tenantry, take all the business of management into their own hands. Though this plea is not valid to the full extent urged, and a large sphere of usefulness is still left open to the talooqdars, it must yet in fairness be admitted that with the loss of power it is but natural they should lose interest in the management of their estates.

4. Many talooqdars have told the chief commissioner that if they could be put on the same footing as the Raja of Benares, who within the limits of his family domains enjoys certain revenue jurisdiction, they would have nothing left to desire. The chief commissioner has never heard that the condition of the village occupant on the estates of the Raja of Benares is inferior to that of the rural population in the adjacent British districts, nor has he heard that they have expressed any wish to be brought under our system.

5. The chief commissioner would much like to see this precedent followed in Oude, not, of course, generally at first, but experimentally in a few special instances of talooqdars, in whose good sense and moderation reliance can be placed. The chief commissioner has lately had the advantage of meeting the superintendent of the domains of the Raja of Benares, and of learning from him the nature and extent of the authority entrusted to the Raja. It embraces civil jurisdiction, but the chief commissioner does not propose to go so far, at present, nor would he concede the authority primarily exercised by the Raja, as a collector of revenue, of selling the rights of the under proprietors for default. His plan is for the talooqdar to appoint an agent or tehseeldar to a subdivision of his estate, paying a rental of, say from Rs. 30 to 40,000. The tehseeldar would exercise the ordinary powers of a landlord for the collection of the rent, and when these fail must, like any other landlord, sue for recovery of the arrears. But his suit will be heard by the talooqdar, not by the district officer, and on his obtaining a decree, he would execute it according to the rules in force. If the defaulting tenant has proprietary rights, the talooqdar would, in satisfaction of the decree, be authorised to transfer them for a term not exceeding five years to any other member of the village community who will pay the balance. If sale become unavoidable, which is not likely to happen, the sanction of the deputy-commissioner must first be obtained. The tenants, on the other hand, would bring their complaints of exaction, ouster, &c., against the tehseeldar to the talooqdar, who would hold open court, as, indeed, has been his wont heretofore. From all orders of the talooqdars an appeal would lie to the deputy commissioner, who would occupy the same position as the Superintendent of the Raja's domains.

6. The privilege which the chief commissioner proposes to confer according to the above sketch of his plan would be personal only, never hereditary. It would be held by the talooqdar during good behaviour, and on the distinct understanding that it will be withdrawn the moment he appears unfitted to exercise it, with the right of appeal to the district officer, the chief commissioner does not well see how it can be abused. At any rate the abuse can be put a stop to before it can have reached any great length. He thinks, however, that the privilege will be so highly prized as to make the possessor careful to do nothing to forfeit it, and he also thinks that the fact of possessing such authority would incline the talooqdar to use it with moderation, for it is in the nature of men, particularly of Easterns, to be more disposed to deal liberally and kindly with those who are dependent on them than with those who assert their independence of them.

7. It must also be explained that it is not proposed to confer this authority on any talooqdar until he has given leases (puttahs) to every tenant holding directly under him, and until all subordinate rights have been recorded.

8. The chief commissioner knows there are objections to putting any class above the law; but the measure he proposes is practically only a modification of the fiscal law to suit an altered state of things. It is, he admits, a measure of a novel kind in our revenue system, and in a counter direction to the course we have been pursuing; but it is not novel to the country, for it is but a return to the native system from which many now think we have been rather too prone to depart.

9. The chief commissioner would also desire to invest with magisterial powers the same talooqdars as enjoy exemption from the ordinary course of fiscal procedure. To confer on them such authorities consonant with English policy, and will, the chief commissioner thinks, have the effect of making them identify themselves with the governing race, and feel themselves part of the Government of the country. Their powers should at first be the special ones of an assistant magistrate to be extended to the full powers of a magistrate as they show fitness to exercise enhanced authority. The chief commissioner would not allow them to issue orders of a general nature to the police, they should merely try the offenders brought before them by the police. They would also be required to conform to all the rules of our system of criminal procedure, and to furnish the customary reports and statements.

10. The following are the talooqdars whom the chief commissioner desires to recommend; they have been chosen as far as possible from different parts of the province to make the example more public, and excite a spirit of emulation. They have not been selected solely for their claims on the consideration of Government; for, unfortunately some of those who have rendered the most signal services are wanting in intellectual capacity, and other qualities besides loyalty are required for the exercise of this extended authority.

I. Maharajah of Bulrampore. Pays a revenue of Rs. 300,000, his estates are situated in the Barraitch division.

II. The brother of the Raja of Kuppeorthulla provided he resides on the Raja's estates in the Barraitch division.

III. Maharajah Maun Sing. Pays a revenue of Rs. 200,000, his estates are situated in the Gonda and Fyzabad districts.

IV. Rana Rughonath Sing. Pays a revenue of Rs. 99,000, his estates lie in the Roy Bareilly district. A Rajpoot of the same family as Bense Madho and the Raja of Morarnow.

V. Raja Hurdeo Buksh. Pays a revenue of Rs. 36,516, his estates lie in the Hurdue district opposite Furruckabad.

VI. Raja Roostum Sahas of Dera. Pays a revenue of near Rs. 60,000, his estates lie in the Fyzabad district.

11. These are all whom the chief commissioner can at this moment recommend with entire confidence. He would like to see the number raised to twelve, and, if permitted, will submit the names of six more, hereafter, when in the course of his tour through the province he shall have become thoroughly acquainted with the character and qualifications of some in respect of whom he is not quite so confident. He wishes to take every precaution to avoid failure even in a single instance. I have, &c.,

No. 213.

From the Secretary to the Government of India, with the Governor-general. To the Chief Commissioner of Oude.

Foreign Department.

Dated Camp Cawnpore, Nov. 2, 1859.

Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your secretary's letter dated 24th ult., No. 2396, and, in reply, to acquaint you that the Governor-general cordially assents to the two proposals recommended therein, viz. the granting to certain talookdars limited revenue jurisdiction over their estates, and the investing them with magisterial powers.

2. Both these measures will tend to the object which, as you are aware, the Governor-general has in view, of turning to the purposes of good government the influence which the great landholders and hereditary chiefs of Oude legitimately possess, instead of seeking to suppress that influence, and to supplant it by our ruling authority in our own officers.

3. The Governor-general is satisfied that no scheme of administration which sets this influence aside, will be acceptable to the people or successful; and now that the revival in perpetuity of the talookdaree system in Oude has been declared, it becomes more than ever necessary that the authority of the talookdars should, within wholesome bounds, be sustained.

4. The Governor-general approves of the proposal that revenue authority should not be conferred upon any talookdar until he has given basis to every tenant holding directly under him, and until all subordinate rights have been recorded.

5. His Excellency also agrees in thinking that for the present it will be well to invest with magisterial powers those alone of the talookdars who are to have exemption from the ordinary course of revenue procedure.

6. The Governor-general has it much at heart that the experiment now about to be made in Oude to enlist the services of the chiefs in the administration of the country should not fail, and that not even any discouragement of it should occur. He therefore entirely concurs in your opinion that the talookdars chosen as the recipients of the new powers should not be chosen on account alone of services rendered to the state, but that very great care should be taken to select those whose intelligence, self-control, and considerate treatment of their dependants, give the best promise of a faithful discharge of their public trusts.

7. For the same reason the Governor-general wishes you to guard against a conclusion being drawn in the minds of these men that, because the Government is about to recognise in them powers akin to those which were left in their hands by the native Government, it will look upon the abuse or lax exercise of those powers with the same indifference as was felt by their former rulers.

8. To prevent this, the precise scope of their functions, the mode of exercising them, and the errors into which they are most likely to fall, should be carefully pointed out to them; and as this can never be so effectually done by general written instructions as by personal intercourse and friendly admonition, the Governor-general wishes that in the course of the approaching cold season, you should visit all the talookdars whom you have proposed as the first to be selected, each on his own estate, and there personally induct the chief into his own new duties. This will be more likely to impress each with a sense of the responsibility placed upon him, than any communications through the ordinary channel of the local officers.

9. The measure is one of which, if it should be successful, the importance will reach far beyond the limits of Oude, and the Governor-general places the introduction of it in your hands with the fullest confidence.

I have, &c.,

BENGAL NATIVE ARMY.

If the Phoenix may be relied upon as an authority in a question of facts and figures, the idea so generally prevalent that in the Bengal Presidency there is a larger native force now under arms than previous to the mutiny, is altogether a fallacy and in direct contradiction to the true state of the case. According to the above-named journal there are not 125,000 armed men, including the military police, between Calcutta and Peshawur. Of these 40,000 belong to the police force, divided in equal proportions through the Punjab, the North-West Provinces, Oude, and Bengal. The regular native army, including irregulars and levies, does not exceed 76,000 men, exclusive of commissioned and non-commissioned officers. It is constituted as follows:—

Punjab force, including Sikh regiments and border levies	26,680
Corps of the line re-armed and Alipore regiment	11,200
Loyal Poorbeas and Lucknow regiments	1,400
Kelat-i-Ghilzi	1,000
Extra Sikh and Goorkha regiments and Kumaon levy	5,600
23 regiments irregular cavalry	9,600
Other corps of irregular horse	1,600
The levies, grand total of	9,700
Shekawtee Bheel, Assam, and similar corps	9,200
Grand total	76,040

By the Government Order of the 13th June, the line corps were reduced to 700 men each, the levies to 600, and the irregular horse to 420. Since then the old native army has been erased almost bodily from the army list, with the exception of sixteen regiments of foot and ten of irregular cavalry. If these figures be correct, it cannot be said that the Bengal Presidency is in any danger from the native soldiery. But, on the other hand, it is plain that, as no further reduction is likely to be made, there can be no diminution of expenditure under that head. We confess to a certain degree of scepticism as to the accuracy of our contemporary's statements, although we do not for a moment call his good faith into question. The intelligence is almost too good to be true; but if the facts be as stated, Lord Canning is entitled to higher praise for the quiet manner in which he has disembarrassed himself of his native troops than he has hitherto received, either at our own hands or from the press in general.

DIAMOND CUT DIAMOND.

A VERY extraordinary case appeared among the law reports in the daily papers during the last week, which clearly illustrates the wisdom of the late Court of Directors in discounte-nancing the visits of Indian potentates to this country. It must still be in the memory of our readers how great curiosity was expressed even in fashionable circles to see that "wonderful woman" who, after losing a priceless wealth of jewels in the Red Sea, had still forty or fifty thousand pounds' worth of rare gems in her casket, besides a hundred thousand pounds in ready money. The poor old Begum, who is now slightly spoken of as one of four or five hundred wives, and as owing her position to her good fortune in becoming a mother, at least displayed more energy and single-mindedness than all those put together who battered on her riches and wasted her resources in ignoble pleasures. The young prince, especially, is represented as having been addicted to all manner of vicious habits, and to the company of debauched and low-lived associates. His last act was in conformity with Falstaff's prayer to "sweet Hal"—he robbed the exchequer, and squandered the spoils in profuse extravagance. The cause of the ex-king was now practically given up by all save the Moulvie Mahomed Musseeh-ooddeen Khan Bahadoor, and he was so crippled from want of funds that he could forward neither his master's business nor his own, whatever the latter may have been. In his distress he applied to one Chard, who, having been recently insolvent, had already volunteered to furnish him with supplies. The Moulvie asked for £500, which were immediately forthcoming, and by way of acknowledgment he was requested to write his name across five slips of stamped paper. Guileless as a Bengal vakeel is wont to be, Mr. Oo-Deen, —as certain Hibernian reporters delight to call him—consented without hesitation to this novel mode of writing a receipt. What did he know about the law of bills of exchange? How should he imagine that there was any difference in the value of stamps? How could a gentle, simple-minded Mahomedan suspect a Christian friend of filling up these innocent-looking papers with such perilous stuff? A victim of misplaced confidence, he learnt only too soon, but when it was already too late, that there are stamps and stamps just as there are faggots and faggots—large and small, and of all intermediate sizes. The stamps in question were unhappily strong enough to carry much more than a hundred pounds, and so, just to test their strength and elasticity, Mr. Chard placed £6,500 upon one of them, and £1,000 upon each of the others. Shortly afterwards the Moulvie wanted some more money, and his lately insolvent friend was a second time his considerate and sympathising banker. When, at last, the long-looked-for remittances did arrive from the treacherous East, the faithful Mahomedan lost no time in repaying the loans of the generous Christian. Incidentally he asked for the return of his autographs, as he imagined they could be of no further use to any one now that he had discharged his debt. As he touchingly observed, in his own country the acknowledgment of an obligation loses its virtue when that obligation has been fulfilled. In that happy land where first he drew the breath of life, fraud is unknown, stamps are never tampered with, no bond or title of any kind is ever disputed, no man sues another for more than is just, and no man ever refuses to pay what is just. Unsuspicious as a Benares money-lender, the Moulvie, though he more than once asked for these magic slips, attached very little importance to them one way or the other, for Chard was his friend and had sat at the same board—perhaps dipped his knife into the same salt-cellar. He was doomed to be terribly undeceived. Humboldt tells us how painful it is to have one's belief in the stability of the earth suddenly overthrown by the shock of an earthquake. Angelina has whispered in our ear, her voice broken with sobs, and the hot bitter tears falling one by one "like the first of a thunder-shower," how her heart was broken when she discovered in Edwin's pocket, not a week after their marriage, a nasty, dirty clay pipe,—Edwin, who had solemnly declared that the faintest whiff of a cigar turned him sick even in the open air. But what are these experiences to the brain-crushing sensation endured by Mr. O'Deen when he first became aware that the friend of his bosom, who had assisted him in adversity, had betrayed his confidence, and conspired against his purse and pocket. For Mr. Chard was acquainted with a Mr. Roy, a gentleman by Act of Parliament, who happened to be acquainted with a gentleman by birth whose name was Oakley. This latter gentleman had travelled far and wide, influenced by the migratory propensity of British youth, and in the course of his peregrinations in the East had come to the conclusion that he was a better judge of the propriety of deposing the King of Oude than Lord Dalhousie with the Council of Calcutta at his back. Indignant at the injustice done to an amiable and excellent sovereign, this travelled squire was only too happy to evince his sympathy for a fallen dynasty by lending money, at THIRTY per cent., on what his solicitor considered good security. Unhappily this security turned out to be the slip of paper bearing the Moulvie's name, which Mr. Chard had converted into a Bill of Exchange for £6,500. But the unsuspecting Oakley at once gave a cheque for £5,000, in full anticipation of receiving £1,500 as the just fruits of his sympathy for a royal sufferer. What became of the £5,000 did not appear in evidence. Mr. Roy, the gentleman by Act of Parliament, received a handsome douceur for the good advice he had given to his roving client, and another portion of the spoils seems to have been appropriated to paying house-rent for Mr. Chard's brother-in-law, a Mr. Dempster Hemming, formerly Registrar of the Supreme Court in Calcutta, and honourably mentioned by one of the counsel as having paid certain debts incurred by himself, the payment of which he had no means of evading. Neither was it shown what had become of the four slips of paper carrying each £1,000, except that Lord Fort's name had been seen upon one of them—a name once mentioned in connection with the exploits of the British army before Sebastopol, though we do not remember having met with it in the despatches. Perhaps, like Lord Nelson, this young nobleman aspires to have a "Gazette" to himself, instead of merely appearing in it. But, in sober sadness, it is a melancholy picture which is presented to the world in the history of this disgraceful case. We have little sympathy for the Moulvie, whose simplicity is decidedly Oriental and by no means partaking of the nature of the dove. But it is a sorry spectacle to behold a number of English gentlemen combining to take advantage of the necessities of a foreigner, whose barbaric extravagance and carelessness about money matters rendered him a seemingly easy and tempting prey. A European, however, is no match for an Asiatic in guile. The biters were themselves bit, and an English jury has declared that they have been guilty of fraud. Mr. Oakley, indeed, escapes this imputation, but the next time he desires to exercise his philanthropy we would recommend him first to peruse the 35th, 36th, and 37th verses of the twenty-fifth chapter of the Book of Leviticus. Otherwise, though Moslem and Pagan may hate him for being a Christian, it will scarcely be—

* * * for that, in low simplicity,
He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rate of usance here with us in London.

SIR CHARLES TREVELYAN'S TOUR.

No stronger evidence need be desired as to the inexpediency of making the prosecution of public works in the minor presidencies dependent on the consent of the Calcutta Council than is furnished in the very able and interesting minute in which the present Governor of Madras has recorded the results of his observations during a recent tour of inspection to the deltas of the Godavery and Kistna. His Excellency commences his narrative by a rapid survey of the town and harbour of Cocanada. The description of the former reminds one of the state of Melbourne previous to the gold discoveries. Broad streets have been laid out on a regular plan, but as there is no metal at hand they are almost impassable in wet weather. Wheel carriages are unknown, and goods are almost entirely conveyed on men's backs; good gravel, however, will be available as soon as the Samulcottah canal is completed, when fresh wholesome water will also be attainable, but these and all other works are a standstill, owing to the restrictive order consequent on the mutiny. The sewerage is also defective, and this is likely to be a difficult matter to remedy, because of the low level of the country and the alluvial nature of the soil. There are, properly speaking, two towns—one on the northern, the other on the southern side of the river—united by a rickety wooden bridge, over which 13,000 persons are computed to pass daily. The early construction of a stone or iron bridge, or one partly composed of both materials, is, therefore, strongly recommended, and also that a plan and estimate be called for. The harbour has been much improved by straightening the mouth of the river, and running out two walls of rough stones into the sea. Two dredging machines are about to commence operations, and it is confidently anticipated that ships of large burden will shortly be able to enter the river and land their cargoes alongside a wharf. The completion of the lighthouse, however, is first indispensable, and some degree of astonishment will be felt that anything whatever should have been permitted to interfere with a work of such importance, and which was already nearly finished. The inland water communication between Coringa and Cocanada also requires to be rendered serviceable, so as to avoid the necessity for putting out to sea in order to pass from one to the other. A very small expenditure, it is said, would connect the creeks, and the result would be seen in a passenger and goods traffic on an active scale. In the mean time, the sides of the river are to be embanked, and the ground adjoining sold for the purpose of constructing wharves and warehouses. Finally, should the measures in progress for opening the navigation of the Godavery prove successful, "Cocanada will become one of the most important harbours in her Majesty's dominions."

The vast works in connection with the canal system of these deltas appear to have greatly impressed the Governor.

"The water," he writes, "is first arrested by two enormous weirs, termed in this country annicuts; and being thus raised to a commanding level, it is distributed to every part of the deltas. One remarkable feature of this system is that irrigation and navigation have been perfectly combined. The ordinary case is for the produce which has been raised by means of the supply channels to be sent to market by means of the main channels, but sometimes the grain is threshed and winnowed on the ground, and loaded at once into a boat moored at hand. The navigation of the canals is completed to tide water, without waste of water, by having the last few miles of each on a dead level, and thus, when the whole of the water is required for irrigation, none is allowed to flow into the sea, excepting the small quantity consumed in lockage."

No tolls are exacted on these canals, the Government wisely preferring to "take the dues in a consolidated form on the crops." The irrigable area of each delta is estimated at eleven hundred thousand acres, a considerable portion of which is already irrigated, and the remainder will be when the subsidiary channels for the detailed distribution of the water come into full play, and when the agricultural population is relieved from all uncertainty by the final adjustment of the land-revenue. The restrictive order affects the works on the Kistna in this wise: "the expensive mainworks have been constructed while the supply channels, whereby the fruit of all this labour and expense may be reaped at comparatively small cost, are unmade." Sir Charles proceeds to remark, with obvious justice:—

"It has been too much the practice to include irrigation works in the same category with other public works. Other public works are intended to promote the general good, more or less directly, but works of irrigation create new value, by an immediate and positive process, with a profusion of which there is no other example. They add from three to six fold to the annual productiveness of the land. This is better than the annexation of new territory, because we gain by giving instead of taking; and neither are expensive military preparations required, nor is any reaction to be feared. On the contrary, the natives are encouraged by it to a life of peaceful industry, with which the insecurity and agitation consequent upon a state of insurrection would be incompatible."

On both the Godavery and the Kistna the greatest difficulties have been overcome, and little now remains to be done save to provide the channels of distribution which alone can make these undertakings profitable. It is accordingly recommended that the chief engineer should be instructed to furnish estimates for the completion of these great works of irrigation, in order that the necessary sanction be obtained from the Supreme and Home Government.

Of the beauty of the scenery in the highlands of the Godavery Sir Charles speaks with warm admiration, and pronounces it superior in grandeur to the Rhine between Coblenz and Bingen. Had the mutiny not occurred it is probable that the first barrier would by this time have been nearly removed, and the navigation opened for 250 miles from the sea. The estimated cost was £80,000, spread over three years.

The present neglected condition of the once important fort of Masulipatam is depicted in vivid colours. "A guard is still maintained at the gate, but breaches are left unguarded up which a company could march abreast." The infantry lines are four miles distant, and each day the detachment for fort duty (110 rank and file) has to march that distance. Sir Patrick Grant, who visited this station in February, 1859, recorded his opinion of its value in the following Minute:—

"Masulipatam is a station for one regiment of native infantry, and small detail of artillerymen; twelve Europeans and the same number of Gounda are now here. There is an old fort, in a state of hopeless dilapidation, and the sooner it crumbles away and is abandoned the better. Inside this fort there is rather an extensive arsenal, containing, at this moment, 15,000 stand of percussion muskets, fifteen serviceable siege guns, complete, with carriages, some ten or twelve partially unserviceable heavy guns (all iron), and four six-pounders, complete with wagons and limbers. There are likewise two capacious magazines, in one of which an immense supply of ammunition is now deposited. I consider that no such depots are required here, and I very strongly recommend that they may cease to be maintained. If the prescribed supply of ammunition, i.e. 500 rounds per piece of ordnance and small arm, is strictly kept up at the head-quarters of the Hyderabad and Nagpore forces, a permanent arsenal, magazine, or depot, at any intermediate point between the grand arsenal at Madras and those forces, is, in my judgment, not only unnecessary but highly objectionable. Let us have no large depots for munitions of war and military stores where there is neither a fortified post nor a European force effectually to protect them. Complete the water communication from the coast to Beizwarrah, and erect a few inexpensive buildings at the port of landing to protect the stores while being transferred to the boats from shipboard, and every essential requirement will be amply met."

Backed by such high authority, Sir Charles Trevelyan indicates the improvements which seem to him most advisable. He suggests that the old fort shall be at once abandoned as a military station and arsenal, that the commissariat establishment be broken up, and that the site of the fort shall be laid out as a commercial entrepôt. The surrounding ditch he would convert into a circular canal, connected with the canal from Beizwarrah; the commodious and substantial barracks and hospital he would employ, respectively, as public warehouses and an exchange; while a building near the principal landing place is pronounced the very thing for a customs-house.

It is satisfactory to learn that the Inamdars have accepted the arrangement lately proposed to them, and that a very trifling percentage of their number had declined the proffered terms of commutation. Sir Charles then concludes this excellent Minute with a well-deserved compliment to Mr. Noble, the Manager of the Church Missionary Society's Schools at Masulipatam, to which he rather hyperbolically adds—"Masulipatam bids fair to become to the Northern Circars more than Oxford and Cambridge have been to the United Kingdom." Finally, the due meed of approbation is bestowed upon the genius and labours of Colonel Cotton, whose "name will be venerated by millions yet unborn, when many who now occupy a much larger place in the public view will be forgotten." A promise to make an annual visit of inspection to the Godavery and Kistna works "longæ finis chartæque viæque est."

COURT OF CHANCERY.—DECEMBER 14.

BOLDERO V. THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Master of the Rolls. It appeared that "The Bengal Civil Servants' Retiring Annuity Fund" was promoted by the East India Company, for the purpose of providing annually, at half the purchasable value, nine annuities of 10,000 rupees each, for nine of their civil servants who, on retiring, had been twenty-five years in the service, having actually spent twenty-two years thereof in India. The proposal for the establishment of the fund was originally made by the civil servants, in a document addressed to the directors on the 1st of May, 1822. The plan suggested was that a fund should be formed, partly by subscriptions of the civil servants and partly by contributions from the Company, sufficient to provide annuities for a certain number of retiring servants, on payment by such retiring officials of such sums as should make up, with their accumulated subscriptions, two-thirds of the value of the annuities. The proposal was transmitted to the board, together with a confirmatory despatch from the Governor-general, and was responded to by a public letter, dated the 8th of December, 1824, from the board, which adopted the principle of the project, and laid down regulations for carrying it out, with certain modifications, which made the institution still more favourable to the civil servants. The substance of the public letter, which was a very lengthy document, was to this effect:—It declared the objects of the institution to be to provide annuities for retiring civil servants, and thereby to encourage more early retirement. And in certain clauses which were especially relied on, it was stated that although, by reason of deaths before the time of retirement, and other circumstances, absolute equality between the different members of the civil service was not attainable, the principle of the regulations was to provide annuities for each member on terms as nearly as possible equal; and that each, on receiving his annuity, should be called upon to pay one-half of its estimated value, according to a certain fixed scale, and no more. The document afterwards proceeded to lay down the specific regulations of the fund. The material provisions were, that the regulations were to be optional as to existing servants, but compulsory on all who should enter after 1825; that the members of the fund should subscribe 4 per cent. of their salaries; that the annuities for retiring servants should be fixed at £1,000 a year; that the Company should add sufficient sums to the fund to provide nine annuities every year; that after twenty-five years' service and twenty-two years' residence in India any servant should be entitled in order of seniority to claim an annuity as soon as one became open; that on accepting an annuity the retiring servant should pay to the fund the difference between half the value of the annuity, calculated according to his age by tables contained in the regulations, and the accumulated value of his subscriptions, on which interest at the rate of 6 per cent. was to be allowed; and if the servant declined to make this payment, he might have an annuity reduced in amount, so as to make its half-value equal to his accumulated subscriptions. These regulations were subject to be modified after a certain time by a vote of three-fourths of the members, with the sanction of the board. After this system had been in operation about ten years it was found that the inducements to retire were not sufficiently strong to make the civil servants avail themselves of the privilege at so early an age as had been anticipated. The full number of annuities were not accepted, and the fund accumulated to a very large amount. A temporary arrangement was then made, under which two-thirds of the annuities which were unaccepted on the original terms should be offered on still more favourable conditions. The price was to be made up only to one quarter instead of one-half of the calculated value, and if the accumulated subscriptions in any case should be found to exceed the quarter value the balance was to be refunded. This supplementary set of regulations was, after some years, abandoned, and never formed a permanent part of the regulations of the fund. At a later period further alterations were discussed, in the course of which it was proposed to embody in the original code a provision for refunding similar in principle to that which was inserted in the temporary regulations. The proposal, however, was not accepted by two-thirds of the civil servants. The rights of the civil servants, therefore, remained dependent on the terms of the public letter of 1824. On the 1st of November, 1858, the plaintiff, John Stephen Boldero, who was then between 61 and 62 years of age, retired, having been 25 years in the service, 22 of which he had resided in India. In the same year he accepted an annuity of 10,000 rupees (£1,000) a year for life, its value, estimated by the table of values annexed to the regulations, being 76,170 rupees, one moiety of which was 32,085 rupees, but as the plaintiff required his annuity to be paid quarterly, an additional sum of 4,726 rupees was payable; this made the half value of the annuity amount to 42,811 rupees. At the date of the plaintiff's retirement, the sum standing to his separate account, being the accumulated value of his contributions with interest, was 87,504 rupees. This exceeded the half value of the plaintiff's annuity by 49,419 rupees, and the total amount chargeable against the plaintiff by the fund regulations by 44,093 rupees. The plaintiff, accordingly, when he accepted the annuity, applied for a refund of the excess of the accumulated amount of his subscriptions and interest, and he in writing protested against the non-payment of the excess. It was alleged that, after making provision for all payments to be made out of the fund, together with some additional charges which it was proposed to throw upon the fund, there would remain a disposable balance of 1,086,257 rupees, applicable to no purpose of the fund, unless it should be applied to repay to subscribers, who had paid more than the half value of their annuities, the excess of their subscriptions. This sum of 1,086,257 rupees, with an appropriated balance, amounting together to 2,026,357 rupees, the East India Company proposed to capitalise, and allow the interest thereof in reduction of the contributions of the Company to the annuity fund. As the Company refused to recognize the plaintiff's claim to a refund, he filed the bill in this cause, and charged that the East India Company were trustees to the subscribers to the fund, and that he had been induced to become a subscriber on the belief, founded on the regulations, that, on retirement, he would have, in addition to his own savings, accumulated in the shape of subscriptions, a life annuity proportionate to his share in the contributions to the fund, and that he should derive advantages of larger amount than could be realised by other modes of investment, such advantages being available by those eligible to receive them upon terms of strict equality, and that, in order to maintain strict equality, the amount of the purchase-money should depend on the value of the annuity, which would be regulated by the age of the annuitant, and that half the value of their respective annuities, and no more, would be required to be paid by servants becoming annuitants. The bill then prayed for a declaration that the plaintiff and the other subscribers were entitled to a refund of any excess of the accumulated value of their contributions and interest above the aggregate amount of the half value of their respective annuities, according to the table annexed to the regulations of the fund, and of the sums payable by them in respect of the advantages conferred by the 33rd, 34th, and 40th regulations. It also prayed for payment, with interest, out of the disposable balance in hand, and that the defendants might be restrained from capitalising the 2,026,357 rupees. The claim for interest was, however, abandoned in the court below. The Master of the Rolls held, in effect, that the annuitants were not entitled to a refund, and dismissed the bill, and from that decision the plaintiff now appealed.

Mr. Rolt, Mr. Butt (of the common law bar), Mr. R. Palmer, and Mr. Freeling were for the plaintiff; the Attorney-general, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Forsyth (of the common law bar), and Mr. Melville were for the Company; Mr. Follett, Mr.

Rogers, and Mr. E. Maonaghten were for other defendants.

The Lord Chancellor reserved his judgment.

EDINBURGH INDIA RELIEF FUND.—At the annual meeting of the general committee appointed to administer the fund for relief of sufferers by the Indian mutiny, raised in Edinburgh and augmented by contributions from all parts of Scotland, a report was read stating that the sum of £2,285 had been distributed during the past year, and that a balance remained for future distribution of £9,378. The largest item of discharge was £1,873, disbursed in weekly payments to 107 widows and 121 orphan children. Seven children had been received into the Edinburgh Orphan Hospital, and were maintained at the expense of the fund, and the school fees of the other orphans were paid by the committee. The sub-committee had last year, in conjunction with the Glasgow committee, set apart a special fund of £500, from which to pay a supplementary pension of 6d. a day to invalided Indian soldiers, the distribution of which had been taken charge of by the staff officers of the different districts. For the present year a similar grant had been again made by the two committees. The sum of £540 had been paid away in grants or loans to persons of the higher ranks, whose circumstances had been affected by the late events in India. The capital fund had been added to in the course of the year by contributions to the extent of about £550 being sent in by local committees. The whole expense of management of the fund during the year had been only £64.

The Publishers have no hesitation in saying that a more life-like and comprehensive Work than the above has never been issued from the press, conveying as it does such a perfectly accurate idea of everything connected with Anglo-Indian life. Nothing appears to have been omitted; and the drawings manifest, by their accuracy of detail, the fidelity with which each separate subject has been rendered. There are illustrations of everything connected with a domestic household, servants, furniture, washing establishments, tents, camp equipage, carriage, &c.; with humorous scenes on the road, and the various styles adopted for locomotion, whether in vehicles drawn by horses or natives, travelling by palanquins, or in doolies, or by the mail-cart, with illustrations exhibiting the peculiarities of the postal arrangements in the East, scenes in travellers' bungalows, in the bazaar, with the economy of the stable, the characteristics of the different breeds of horses as offered for sale by Caubul, Hindostanee, and Arab merchants; nor are the sports of the field omitted—scenes on the turf, tiger-shooting, pig-sticking, and the like—while agriculture has not been forgotten. To each sketch is appended a brief explanation, thus conveying at a glance all the information required, and combining to form a most instructive and amusing work.

JAMS, JELLIES, and MARMALADE,

By BARNES, MORGAN, and Co.

(the Originators of this method of preserving), Upper Thames-street, London, E.C. This mode of Preserving is now acknowledged to be far superior to any yet invented. The contents will keep good for any number of years without the Tin imparting any metallic taste to the Preserve, and never candy or ferment. To Regimental Messes they are peculiarly adapted, being more portable than jars, and not liable to breakage. B. M. and Co. would also recommend their Pickles, Sauces, Tart Fruits, &c., and their large stock of York and Cumberland Hams, Cheese, and Bacon.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.—

CONSEQUENCES of NEGLECT.—In our variable climate the larger proportion of diseases to which mankind is liable depends on the neglect or inefficient treatment of coughs, colds, influenza, and rheumatism. The prudent will pay attention to the first symptoms, which are removed at once by the use of Holloway's Pills and Ointment. In chest complaints, while taking his Pills, their effect is quickened and increased by briskly rubbing his Ointment on the back and breast twice a day for five minutes or longer if convenient.

The friction causes the Ointment to penetrate the skin whence it passes to the lungs and purifies the whole mass of blood as it flows through those organs in its circulation.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS

is allowed, by upwards of 300 Medical Gentlemen, to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided; a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body, two inches below the hips, being sent to the Manufacturer.

NEWBERRY'S COD LIVER OIL CAKES.

—“We have examined a specimen of gingerbread made by Messrs. Newberry—each cake containing a teaspoonful of Cod Liver Oil. The gingerbread is extremely light and pleasant, the flavour of the oil being completely covered. This seems likely to prove a very useful mode of administering

Cod Liver Oil to children, and to others who are nauseated by the offensive odour and flavour of the Oil as generally taken.”

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

We are in receipt of letters from Calcutta to the 24th of November, and of papers to the 23rd. The news is not important, beyond testifying to the restoration of tranquil and uneventful times. Flying columns, indeed, are still in the field, but their operations are likely to bear the impress of a police rather than of a military character. On the Nepal frontier depredations are occasionally committed by bands of marauders, but the real insurgents are daily stealing away to their homes, where it will be the best policy to allow them to remain undisturbed.

It will be seen from our Calcutta correspondent's letter—who, by the way, appears to be afflicted with "blue devils"—that the Right Hon. James Wilson was expected very shortly in Calcutta, where he would be received by the two gentlemen who represent the Legislative Council in the absence of the Viceroy. Sir Bartle Frere and Mr. Le Geyt, however, are likely to be at their posts in the first week in December, and then we shall arrive at "the beginning of the end," so far as the Income-tax Bill is concerned. The natives, it appears, are beginning to be roused to a comprehension of the inquisitorial nature of that measure, and to be preparing that greatest of all obstructions—a passive resistance. On this subject we have extracted from the Englishman a very significant letter from Meer Allee, a native of remarkable intelligence and shrewd observation.

The Governor-general was still "starring" it in the provinces, and apparently with good effect. The khilluts, however, are described as being wretchedly inferior to their nominal value. One, valued at Rs. 25,000, is said to be dear at 5,000; while shawls estimated at Rs. 500 each might be purchased in the bazaar for the tenth part of that sum. Of course, Lord Canning is in no way answerable for this. He had no choice but to place himself in the hands of those who professed to be wise in such matters. He trusted, and was deceived—like wiser men before him, and to come hereafter.

The Lieutenant-governor of the North-West Provinces was to leave Allahabad on the 21st November, on a tour through his government. He expected to reach Roorkee on the 31st January, after having visited Futtelhpore, Cawnpore, Futtelghur, Shahjehanpore, Allyghur, Meerut, and Seharunpore. His further route is not given.

Lord Canning's minute of thanks to the civil service—the libro d'oro of the Indian service, as the Saturday Review happily expressed it—has not given universal satisfaction. According to the Hurkaru, "it has provoked some discussion; and many an individual who rendered good service to the State during the mutiny must feel disappointed that his name does not figure in the list. The publication of such a document was necessary, but it should have been prepared with greater care, and with more regard to order than is shown in the present minute. Amongst the omissions are Mr. W. Tayler, the ex-commissioner of Patna; Mr. A. Ross, the judge of Ghazee-pore; Mr. H. B. Fane, the magistrate of Jounpore; Messrs. Pomeroy and Elliott, assistant-magistrates in the Benares division; the renowned Venables; Mr. Kavanagh, of Lucknow; and Mr. O'Donnell, of the Telegraph Department, with many others, both living and dead, whose acts and deeds at the trying period under review are worthy of being had in remembrance. The list of non-combatants, also,—those whose duties only were increased on account of the mutiny—is incomplete. The meed of praise is bestowed on the Secretaries of the Military, Foreign, and Home Departments, as well as on the Financial Secretary, the Secretary in the Department of Public Works, and the Superintendent of Marine, but the Civil Auditor, the Postmaster-general of Bengal, and the Superintendent of the Telegraph Department, and the heads of other Departments whose work was equally onerous, and, perhaps, equally increased, are not considered worthy of a place in the list."

In compliance with instructions from Lord Stanley when at the head of Indian affairs, Sir William O'Shaughnessy has made some important experiments as to the distance direct telegraphic communication could be conveyed. The result seems to indicate that there is no limit; at least messages were correctly and instantaneously flashed a distance of 2,300 miles.

The intelligence from China is to the effect that the Emperor has applied to Mr. Ward, the American minister, to act as mediator with the French and English Governments. Defensive measures, however, were at the same time being pushed forward.

From Japan we learn that the question of exchange has been satisfactorily arranged, and that an embassy was to be despatched to the United States on board the Powhattan, in February next.

BENGAL.

CALCUTTA CORRESPONDENCE.

CALCUTTA, November 24, 1859.

The steamer Nemesis, with the "regenerator of the finances of India" on board, has been telegraphed from Ceylon, and Mr. Wilson is expected here in two or three days. He will find, on his arrival, that the Governor-general is busy at Agra, squandering money on "loyal natives," as he has done at Lucknow, Cawnpore, and Futteghur, and that he intends to spend the hot weather at Simla, without giving a thought to finances or reforms. He will even find that there are not sufficient members of the Legislative Council present in Calcutta to form a quorum. He will find himself quite helpless, and without occupation. How he is to satisfy the expectations of the people of England after all his grand speeches and promises it is impossible to conjecture. It is whispered that officials here are chuckling rather at the certain disappointment of his hopes, and the mortification he will experience when he finds that he is nobody in India, and can do nothing. He has been assuming and "protesting" too much, and a fall from the high position "vaulting ambition" has led him to leap to will not displease his co-members of the Council.

An article from the Times, on the subject of the Imperial guarantee to Indian loans, has been received by the Bombay Mail, and will do much mischief among the native community. We had all expected, from the powerful advocacy the Times had latterly given to the policy of the Imperial guarantee, that that measure would soon be adopted. Now, to our horror, the Times is lauding the firmness of the House of Commons in refusing the guarantee, and argues that that refusal has made India reform her ways, and impose new taxes to meet her expenditure. The Times can see no other way of "reinstating Indian finance in a sound position," except by adding two millions a year of interest to her debt, which is the sum that the refusal of the guarantee costs her. If India breaks down under this treatment, England will assuredly have to pay her shortcomings, which will be all the heavier in consequence of her obstinate refusal to recognise her legitimate responsibilities.

The licence tax has not passed the third reading, and it is very doubtful whether it will be imposed at all. The natives in the interior will close their business rather than pay it. But if it were imposed it would not produce either four millions or a "revolution," as a foolish correspondent of the Times writes. Active revolutions are now impossible in this country. The natives are disarmed and afraid to move; the Europeans are too few, and, I believe, too loyal, to think of such a thing. But passive resistance, in the case of unpalatable taxes, will be displayed in such a manner as to baffle all material forces. If you tax the banker's or bunny's business, you cannot prevent him from closing it. An amusing case, illustrative of the native character, happened the other day at Bombay. The Government trebled the tax on toddy trees, and the owners declined to draw any more toddy from them. So it will be with the licence tax. What we want is a property tax, and why the present Government is afraid to impose it is incomprehensible. Why the great lord, whose cheek was unblanched during the mutinies, should pale before the idea of taxing the disarmed natives' property is inexplicable.

I do not now believe in the story of the Nana's death. The story of the spy who showed the gold mohurs he had received, which he alleged were distributed on the occasion of the Nana's death, convinces me that the report is false. The Nana is alive, but, no doubt, would be exceedingly glad to make us believe that he is dead. I hope we shall not catch him until Lord Canning has left India, as he would be certain to escape punishment, for some reason that we cannot at present imagine. At Futteghur, recently, he gave a handsome khillut to the Rajah of Powain, because latterly, when victory was no longer doubtful, he did some service. During the dark days of the mutiny he was most hostile to us, and refused shelter to the unfortunate fugitives from Shahjehanpore, who were brutally murdered in consequence of being driven out of his territories. The Governor-general, however, in giving him the khillut, reproached him with his previous conduct, and warned him not to do the like again. The Rajah will parade his khillut before his people, put the reproach in his pocket, and boast to them that the great Sahib, out of pure fear of him, had tried to propitiate him with a grand present.

The telegram tells us that the Indian and Royal armies are to be amalgamated, and that an expedition is not to be sent to China. The next thing we expect to hear is that Mr. Bruce has been ordered to go to Peking, perform the kotow—which, according to John Chinaman, is, "knockee headee against floor ninee times"—and humbly beg the Emperor's pardon for firing at his forts. As for me, I am thinking of emigrating to the Rocky Mountains, or to some island "yet unclaimed by Spain," where I shall never read a paper, or hear of the degradation of once-glorious England.

THE ROTATION OF STAFF OFFICE.

The true position of this question appears to be as follows. The difficulty of securing a sufficiency of trained staff officers has been keenly felt in England. A struggle like the campaign in the Crimea kills off a generation, and it is often almost impossible to replace them. It is also considered that a tour of staff work greatly benefits a regimental officer. The new sphere opens his mind, removes prejudices, and above all prepares him for the management of troops in masses. To secure all these advantages an order was passed limiting the tenure of staff appointments to five years. These appointments are very few. They are all strictly military in character, men train themselves for their tour, and the new system is said to be working well. It also increases patronage, an end which in a Government of conciliation is not to be despised.

Accordingly the Indian Government was directed to "assimilate" the system to that in force in the British Army. Nothing could have been more sensible, had not the systems to be assimilated been radically distinct. Staff officers in England are purely military. In India the majority are civil. In England they require but a short special training superadded to the general instruction. In India, in the majority of such offices, special training is all in all. No amount of military education, for example, will help an officer to settle Jotee Pershad's accounts, or increase the revenue of Mysore, or correct a blunder in the survey of Peshawur. He must be specially trained to do his work at all, and the mere apprenticeship generally occupies the time allowed for his tour of office. It is not a question, as in England, between a few very efficient staff officers, and many less efficient but still competent. It is a question between having the work done well, and not done at all. Under such circumstances, the order, in its integrity, cannot be applied. If it is, everybody must be reappointed as a special case, and a road is opened not only to favouritism but to the gratification of the personal piques of the chiefs of departments.

The order may be applied to purely military offices, but even in these the difficulty of selection will be extreme. Is the command of an irregular regiment a staff office or not? If it is, every officer will be removed just as his men have learnt to confide in him. If it is not, what is? the Adjutant-general's office? It takes five years to give a man the grasp over the details of an army so vast, without which officers of this class are clerks. And so with all other offices. The order, while the army remains organised as at present, must remain dead, a new instance of the impossibility of governing India in England.—Friend of India.

THE CONFISCATION OF OUDE.

We copied from the Oude Gazette yesterday the circular of Major Barrow, the Special Commissioner of Revenue in Oude, explaining the view taken by Government of the confiscation proclamation of March, 1858, to all commissioners and deputy-commissioners engaged in making revenue settlements. The tenor of this circular is very good; but at the same time it is clear that the use to be made of the previous Proclamation either then just flashed on the revenue authorities, or Lord Canning very lately discovered the best method of utilising his confiscation of the whole internal tenures of the province. Major Barrow, for example, tells his subordinates that all orders which may have been passed on petitions regarding claims for rights to be considered hereafter are to be recalled, and an order in conformity with this circular of January 28, 1859, is to be inscribed upon it, evidently showing that the use made of the Proclamation of 1858 was an afterthought. The exempted talookdars whose estates were not confiscated will not now be in so good a position as those who have had their estates confiscated and restored. Their tenures remain as before under the Hindoo law of undivided properties, all the tenures remaining in existence, as before; an anomaly which the Viceroy can no doubt easily correct by issuing a special proclamation in their favour, confiscating their property, and thus annihilating all conflicting claims and disputed rights, as he boasts he has done in the case of all others. He could then present them with their estates in a graceful manner, not as estates conferred for future good conduct, but as a reward for the past. It is not impossible but these loyal talookdars, as well as all the other suspicious gentlemen, do not care two straws for the words of these proclamations and sunnuds, but look to the substantial fact of the estate, with its usufruct, being placed again in their possession. In this case the exempted talookdars might be indifferent to graceful compliments with their sunnuds, but they would certainly be very glad to get rid of legal responsibilities and liabilities with which the omission to confiscate their property must leave them burdened.

The translation of the sunnuds confirms our view of the nature of the settlement; that it is not a perpetual settlement of Government rent, but a perpetuation of the Talookdaree system, that is, a guarantee is given to the nobility and landed proprietary of Oude, that at no future period will the British Government take their estates from them under pretence of recognising the rights of an imaginary proprietary; men, farming the land as tenants, and who have held no other position for more than two centuries. The rage to arrange all the transactions between the smallest cultivator and his superior, even to driving that superior from his ancient estates and establishing a ryotwary settlement, is at last abated. The doctrinaires of India have met here with a terrible resistance, and have been compelled to abandon their utopian schemes of making every ryot happy and comfortable, on his own registered acre of land, with all his wants calculated to a penny, and all his doings noted and reported by the village accountant in a form, according to the book of Thomason, page 80 and so. A few trifles were overlooked, such as a failure of season, providence, and the result of a whole people living on profits instead of wages. All this the people of Oude had seen and resisted. They have gained their object, defeated the apostles of Proudhon and Louis Blanc, but our Viceroy takes the credit of this forced measure to himself, one of the greatest that has been carried out during his reign, and one whose consequences are not yet all foreseen. We believe the result will be most beneficial to the whole country, and that it will be impossible to continue to govern the old provinces under the "Bird Laws" with the example of Oude constantly before them, a standing censure on the injustice and impolicy with which they have been treated in the day of our strength and their ignorance. —Englishman, Nov. 10.

INDIAN TAXATION.

When we contemplate the recent measures devised for taxing the people of India, we are struck with the profound ignorance displayed by those who have originated them, of the character and peculiar idiosyncrasy of that people. Pliant and manageable beyond all the peoples in the world in many things, they are on some points the most obstinate and immovable. They will submit to and fawn upon a conqueror, be his nation or religion what it may. They are content to hold the land of their birth from him, and pay him a half, or even three-fourths of its annual yield; but tax their houses or their shops, their hoondees or their toddy trees, and they will show an amount of passive resistance that will defeat the most energetic tax imposer, and the most determined ruler. We all remember the wonderful feat of the population of Benares, who abandoned their homes and encamped in the desert, like the persecuted Jews fleeing from Egypt, rather than pay a tax on their houses, imposed by the Government. And there they remained with their wives and families, goods, chattels and household gods until the Government was compelled to give way, and the obnoxious tax was removed. The experience of the past, however, does not appear to influence our rulers in the slightest degree. In their Licence Bill they outrage the feelings and habits of the people far more than the former Government did with its house-tax, and we have no hesitation in saying that they will be as signally defeated. We published an excellent letter yesterday from Ameer Ale, and we give the following extract, as it bears especially upon our argument:—

"On the 9th October last, a large concourse of people, both Hindoos and Mahomedans, including Mahajuns, Kothewals, and other respectable inhabitants of the city, assembled in my lodging at Mehndroo. They demanded from me an exposition of the intent and object of the Bill in question, an account of the meeting convened in Calcutta for the purpose of discussing it, and a repetition of my own sentiments on the subject. It occupied me three hours to explain to them the purposes of the intended law, to give them a summary account of the proceedings of the Calcutta meeting, and the resolutions passed there; and lastly, to recapitulate my own view as delivered at the meeting. Very vehement discussion took place on the point of the exposure of tradespeople's books and accounts, which the Bill rendered imperative. They argued with much force that the practice would be highly injurious to their interest."

When the people thoroughly understand the new tax, and its offensively inquisitive character, they will resist it to a man, after the manner of their nation. Every shop in the country will be closed, and the tax-gatherer will be informed that they have wound up their business, and ceased to carry on trade. We have before us, on a small scale, a very excellent example of what may be expected from the people of India, when a tax of an unusual and obnoxious nature is imposed upon them, in a case that has recently occurred at Bombay. The excise duty on toddy-trees was increased by the Government of Bombay two hundred per cent., and the result is thus related by the Bombay Gazette:—

"This new duty on toddy trees is to come into operation to-morrow, and the owners of these trees have in consequence combined not to draw toddy, a course which will preclude bakers from providing bread, and of which they have given timely intimation to their patrons, so that they might make other arrangements."

The owners of the toddy trees will rather lose the produce than pay the increased duty, and the Government is thoroughly helpless. It will be disgracefully defeated as it will be in the licence-tax. There is no machinery by which the people can be compelled to bleed their toddy trees or open their shops. The mode of supplying the wants of Government without shocking the feelings of the people, or trampling upon their traditions or customs, has been pointed out to our rulers a hundred times. Our correspondent Ameer Ale, who thoroughly understands the character of his countrymen, has in his letter pointed out also a short, easy, and summary method of raising the largest sums that may be wanted. Will the law-makers take a hint from no one? Are they inaccessible to reason? Are they deaf to the counsils of European and native? Are they like the Egyptian rulers of old, whose hearts were so hardened that they neglected and despised the warnings and terrible visitations that announced and were the forerunners of their destruction? It is not yet too late for them to quash their obnoxious Bill, and substitute some measure more consonant to the taste of the people, and more efficient for the purpose of money supply.—Englishman, Nov. 11.

HOW PEGU GROWS.

Nearly six years ago the British annexed Pegu. Consisting of the valleys of the Irrawaddy and Sitang, with a rich alluvial soil from which the worst tillage could have raised a hundred-fold, with great forests of teak clothing the slopes of the central range of hills between the rivers, with a seaboard which tempted commerce, and creeks which intersected the rich deltas and might have been the highways of a prosperous trade, the population was scanty, and their condition miserable. The Burmese Government raised with difficulty from a country two-thirds of the size of England, a revenue of little more than fifteen lakhs of rupees. The fortune of war gave it to the British, and in five years the fifteen lakhs have become forty-five, the population is doubled, a trade of the value of three millions sterling is created, and China and Europe supplied with rice to the extent of nearly two lakhs of tons a year. Cheap and speedy justice is administered, robbery and violence diminished, the material comforts of the people increased, education obtains at least a footing, roads are made, and the post-office and the electric telegraph exercise their influence. Forced labour is completely abolished; the wild Karens of the frontier and the Hills are civilised in thousands, and a new Christian nation is born. These results are only the first-fruits of our administration; their growth has been comparatively rapid. While we in Hindostan were engaged in a struggle for existence, and saw for a time the machine of Government violently broken and the revenue cease to flow along its ordinary channels, Pegu was undisturbed; the king from whom we had wrested it was forward in his offers of assistance, should assistance be necessary, and its commissioner fed us with supplies for our campaigns. During the past two years, from Rangoon and Maulmain, one thousand and thirty-four elephants, besides hundreds of bullocks, ponies, and carts, were shipped to India almost without a casualty, a feat stranger in the history of warfare than their first introduction by Pyrrhus into Italy.

Passing over the first two years of its occupation, let us start from 1855-56, and trace the gradual growth of the province up to the close of the last official year, a report of which has been just issued. The last year affords a favourable point from which to view the course of our administration. In some respects it was not favourable. A murrain prevailed among the cattle, the labour of the cultivators was consequently cramped, and there was a deficiency of rain. The result was even worse than a bad harvest causes in England. There prices are affected and the people suffer; but in the East, where there is an annual assessment on the land which varies according to the seasons, the revenue also suffers, and the exports are reduced in quantity. The Burmese raised a revenue of Rs. 15,71,498 from Pegu. In the third year of our occupation we had doubled, and in the sixth year trebled, the amount:—

1857-58 .. .. .	40,81,477
1858-59 .. .. .	45,31,120

The chief item of this revenue is, of course, from the land, the amount being in 1857-58 upwards of 12½ lakhs of rupees, and in the past unfavourable year a little more than 12 lakhs. An attempt made at a perpetual settlement failed from the want of unanimity in the cultivators in accepting it. The land is assessed in extensive circles of twenty or thirty square miles, each containing the independent holding of two hundred or more peasants. Alarmed lest in an unfavourable year they should be unable to meet their engagements, they would not break up their circles and accept leases for ten years at a fixed amount. But they readily welcomed a change to an assessment at a fixed rate per acre, termed by them queung, over an area of from three hundred to five hundred acres instead of their great circles. The tax is thus adjusted according to the advantages of the soil, and inducement given to bring waste land under cultivation, while the revenue gains in proportion. Ten years' leases, and finally a perpetual settlement in Pegu, would do for its people what has been done for Bengal, and still more firmly attach them to our rule.

The capitation-tax comes next in order of importance, yielding Rs. 899,075. This is a tax peculiar to Burmah and on the whole popular. Every married family pays Rs. 4 a year; but in some districts it is commuted into a house tax. Its amount affords a fair index of the increase of population whether by immigration or from natural causes. The number in 1856-57 was 582,253, in the next year it rose upwards of two lakhs, and was last year 800,974, of whom 613,244 are Burmese and 189,906 Karens. The customs yielded Rs. 800,527, there being an increase in the sea customs in the last month of the year of Rs. 30,000 owing to the new tariff. The increase in the trade of Rangoon and Dal-housie bears a proportion to the growth in all other departments. The value of imports and exports was in

1856-57 .. .. .	2,21,51,771
1857-58 .. .. .	3,04,38,388
1858-59 .. .. .	3,08,69,700

and of the great staple, rice, there was exported by sea and across the frontier—

1856-57 .. .. .	1,26,476
1857-58 .. .. .	1,86,494
1858-59 .. .. .	1,56,711

The deficiency last year was owing, as has been said, to the want of rain. The expenditure for the civil administration amounted to about half the revenue, or Rs. 23,76,509. If the charges for the flotilla and naval yard be debited to the military defence of the province, the whole expense may be reckoned as about 20 lakhs. The marine charges are being reduced, and the progressive increase of the population and the revenue will not cause any increase on the present civil establishment. The cost of the Pegu light infantry is included in the 20 lakhs, and the popularity of our rule and our friendly relations with the King of Burmah render it unlikely that the expense of the military defence of the province will be greater henceforth than it is now. We may reckon, therefore, with some certainty, on Pegu as every year becoming more and more a feeder of the resources of the empire. With a better system of assessment and a larger population, the land-tax and the customs alone should be doubled in the next five years.

Gratifying as these results are, the one fact of the civilisation of the Karens would, even in their absence, have justified all our administrative labours in Pegu. Our conquest of the country, and the protection of our army and our courts allowed the missionary to settle on a frontier which had ever been the scene of violent robberies and internecine warfare. In three years, of 50,000 wild Karens the native missionary Qualah had civilised one-third. There is now a Christian community numbering upwards of 20,000, who have built their own schools and churches, and support their own teachers and ministers. Government has given its aid in the shape of grants to the schools, and its officers have ever manifested the warmest personal interest in their success. Native agents were officially appointed to mix with the more distant Karens, to induce them to free their slaves, and cease their incessant wars upon each other. Acting as arbiters, and using only moral influence, two of these men under the late Captain D'Oyly have wrought wonderful changes on the frontier of Toungoo. —Friend of India.

HOW INDIAN RAILWAYS PAY.

Captain Hodgson, in charge of the office of Government Consulting Engineer, has published an analysis of the revenue and traffic of the three Indian railways during the latter half of the year 1858. He has no theories to support, no prejudices to lead him astray; or if he has any, a casual reader of his analysis would say he is decidedly hard on railways, and anxious rather than not to cut down their profits to the smallest sum. In the teeth of the Chief Engineer, he refuses to consider as a charge against capital a large item of expenditure for an experiment in maintenance of way on the East Indian Railway, although the whole line to Delhi will derive benefit from the trial. As statistics, and the conclusions drawn from them, are proverbially susceptible of colouring, and it is certainly not the interest of a Government engineer to swell the revenue account at the expense of the capital, Captain Hodgson's deductions might be tested before being confidently received. They refer also to a period since which nearly a year has elapsed, reforms have been made, the fares have been lowered, the lines have been extended, the traffic has been largely increased, and the original expenditure spread over a larger area. We accept them, therefore, not as affording materials for a fair picture of what Indian railways are, or for an idea as to what they will become, but as historic facts, as a statement of what they were from July to December, 1858.

During the entire year the East Indian Railway carried 1,172,852 passengers, or 8,952 per mile. The gross earnings per train per mile were Rs. 3-14-1, and the working expenses Rs. 1-15-1. The profits were 49-9 per cent., and the expenses 50-1 per cent. of the whole earnings. Reckoning the outlay on the opened line at a million and a half sterling, the profit on the capital is 64 per cent. In the previous half-year it was 64 per cent. In the corresponding half-year of 1857 the per centage of expenses to revenue was 38-7; it has risen to 50-1. While the train mileage increased by 35-9, the passenger traffic increased by only 13-2, but the goods traffic by 40-8. The decrease in the gross earnings is thus 8-4 per cent. The gratifying feature in these results is the increase of goods traffic 2-6 per cent. above the mileage increase. The reiterated statement of those who are not content with advocating canals, but must always oppose railways, that, however satisfactory the revenue may be at the outset, the increase of traffic will not be proportioned to the extension of the line, is thus confuted in what will ultimately prove the most remunerative part of the traffic in India. That there should have been a proportionate decrease of 11-7 per cent. in the passenger traffic, is, we believe, temporary, is not true of the present year, and is accounted for by the fact of the opening of the line from Burdwan to a mere Bengalee village, which required a disproportionate increase to the establishments, and could attract only a few passengers. This must necessarily be the case till a great terminus like Rajmahal is reached.

The Great Indian Peninsula Railway was open for 68 miles on the Concan and 103½ on the Deccan line, or a total of 171½. As 64 of these miles were open for only a fortnight, 135½ is assumed as the standard. Unlike the E. I. line the returns from passenger traffic are most satisfactory, and the receipts from goods, though showing an improvement on previous periods, still disappointing. The expenses amount to 43-35 on the receipts, a result which is creditable to the G. I. P. Railway as compared with the E. I. Railway in working. But the capital expended on the former is so much greater that the net per centage is £4-5-10 against £64 on the latter. The passenger income is Rs. 4-14-6 per train per mile against Rs. 3-13-4 in 1857; the goods traffic only Rs. 2-9-11. The high rates for goods are alone to blame for this result, and their recent reduction is still insufficient.

When we look at the revenue of the Madras Railway we cease to wonder that the men who are the greatest opponents of railways belong to that Presidency. It is the worst of the three. Open for ninety-six miles, and worked as cheaply as the other Indian lines, from its high rates it has not succeeded in securing much traffic. Its expenses are accordingly 66-44 per cent. of the whole revenue, but there is a slight improvement on previous years, which raises the profits to nearly three and a half per cent. Looking at the three railways we have the following results per mile for the half-year:—

	Passengers.	Mamds of Goods.	Total receipts.	Total expenses.	Profits per cent.
E. I. R.	4,515	20,834	Rs. 7,173	Rs. 3,593	64
G. I. P.	4,305	14,112	4,584	2,117	44
M. R.	1,459	8,605	2,473	1,642	33

During the half year the E. I. Railway carried 501,578 passengers, the G. I. P. Railway 553,810, and the Madras Railway 140,110, distributed thus:—

	3rd Class.	2nd Class.	1st Class.
E. I. R.	555,082	28,051	8,445
G. I. P. R.	595,138	41,708	6,970
M. R.	133,747	5,965	398

This gives a total of 2,571,008 passengers carried during the year.

When we compare these results with the figures published by the Board of Trade on English railways for 1858, we have reason to congratulate ourselves on the larger returns of the Indian lines. The average rate of dividend on the whole of the ordinary share capital in England was 3-06, somewhat less than the yield of even the Madras line. Even the interest on preference capital and loan was only 4-63, or little more than the yield of the G. I. P. line, and two per cent. below the East Indian line. In round numbers, 140,000,000 passengers were conveyed; but in proportion to the mileage, the number of passengers in the E. I. railway is greater than in Ireland, nearly equal to that of Scotland, and about three-fifths that of England. The average cost of the construction of the English lines has been per mile £39,275; of the American, £8,275; and of the G. I. P. railway, £8,253. The working expenses on the Indian lines are less than on any other, and every new extension, every new reduction of the rates, increases the receipts.

These results, we submit, are encouraging in themselves. They point also to a future for Indian railways, of which men do not dream. As yet they are single lines, without even roads as feeders; as yet they have not reached their great termini, but each ends in a swamp or a village; as yet their fares for third-class passengers, and for goods, are disproportionately high. When the Overland traffic, and the produce of the Hills and well-watered valleys, are borne along between Madras and Beypore; when Central India and the Assigned Districts of Hyderabad pour their vast cotton wealth into Bombay; when the goods of Manchester are borne into the interior, and the riches of the doabs and deltas of the Indus and the Ganges, and the tea of the Himalaya slopes, are carried down to Kurrachee and Calcutta; and when the dense population of these valleys, ever on the move, is attracted by fares lower than those of their own boats, Indian railways will yield almost fabulous dividends. The one secret which will accomplish this, which has made the East Indian railway—only partially aware of it—eclipse the others, and which only one English line has yet perceived, is cheap fares, cheap rates.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BENGAL BONDED WAREHOUSE ASSOCIATION.—At the half-yearly general meeting of the directors of the Bengal Bonded Warehouse Association, held at its office on Wednesday the 9th November, 1859, at noon, the following resolutions were passed unanimously:—1. That the report of the directors be received and approved, and the accounts passed as correct. 2. That a dividend of Rs. 15 per share be declared.—The meeting separated after a vote of thanks to the chair.—WILLIAM DUNCAN, Chairman.

MAJOR HUTCHINSON, military secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Oude, is to be appointed officiating military secretary to the Lieutenant-governor, from February next, on the departure of Lieutenant-colonel Lawrence on furlough to England.

MAJOR LAKE, commissioner and superintendent Trans-Sutlej States, on retiring from the service, will be succeeded by Mr. R. H. Davies, at present secretary to his honour the Lieut.-governor.

ANALYSIS OF PUNJAB OPIUM.—With reference to a Government resolution of April 15 last, Dr. Birdwood, Secretary and Curator Government Central Museum, forwarded, for the information of Government, copy of a letter from the chemical analyser to Government, showing his analysis of the Punjab opium forwarded to the museum by Messrs. Cope and Co., of Umritsur. The value of the Punjab opium submitted for analysis will, Dr. Birdwood states, be better seen by comparing it with the other opiums found in commerce at the present time.

the present time.				Morphia per cent.
Punjab opium No. 1	..	..	..	..	4.44
Ditto No. 2	..	..	..	..	9.26

Constantinople opium	..	..	..	..	15.00 (!)
Egyptian opium	..	..	..	..	7.00
Trebizond opium	..	..	..	..	1.00 (!)

Dr. Birdwood stated that the result of Dr. Haine's analysis would be forwarded by him to Messrs. Cope and Co., and suggested the propriety of Government communicating the same to the Government of Lahore. Dr. Haines, chemical analyser to Government, gives the result of his analysis as follows:—"The packet of Punjab opium contained two samples, marked 1 and 2. Both samples were rather dark in colour, moist and sticky, devoid of granulation, and of a tolerably pleasant but rather faint opiate smell; in these respects resembling rather Bengal than Malwa opium. The treatment with oil, which gives the granular appearance to Malwa opium, had apparently not been resorted to. The following is the constitution of the opium as found by analysis:—

	No. 1.	No. 2.
Moisture	8-73	8-67
Morphia	4-44	9-26
Narcotine	3-17	2-73
More extractive, &c.	83-66	79-34
Total	100-00	100-00

The morphia and narcotine were obtained in a pure crystalline form, quite free from resin, and but slightly coloured. The proportion above shown is, therefore, allowing for unavoidable loss, certainly less than is actually contained in the specimens. No. 1 is fully equal in this respect to an average sample of Patna opium, but No. 2 is the richest in morphia of all the Indian opiums that I have yet examined, and should it not meet the Chinese taste, it would find a ready sale in Europe."

THE LICENCE INCOME TAX BILL.—The following is the letter from an intelligent native alluded to in an article which we have this day extracted from the Calcutta Englishman:—Sir,—I took advantage of the late relaxation from duty to visit my native place, Barrh, for the benefit of my health. In the course of my journey, which commenced on the 29th September and ended on the 25th October, I had ample opportunities to see and speak to the people of Shereghottee, Gya, Patna, and Barrh, which lay in my way. Although I had more than one conversation on the subject of the Licence Bill with the inhabitants of those places, I shall here give you, in as few words as possible, an account of the meeting held at Patna, having for its object the discussion of that all-engrossing subject, leaving you at liberty to give publicity to my communication should you consider it expedient to do so. On the 9th October last, a large concourse of people, both Hindoos and Mahomedans, including Mahajuns, Kothewals, and other respectable inhabitants of the city, assembled in my lodging at Mehendroo; they demanded from me an exposition of the intent and object of the bill in question, an account of the meeting convened in Calcutta, for the purpose of discussing it, and a repetition of my own sentiments on the subject. It occupied me three hours to explain to them the purposes of the intended law, to give them a summary account of the proceedings of the Calcutta meeting, and the resolutions passed there; and lastly to recapitulate my own views as delivered at the meeting. Very vehement discussion took place on the point of the exposure of tradespeople's books and accounts which the bill rendered imperative. They argued with much force that the practice would be highly injurious to their interests. The opinion I delivered received the general and unqualified approbation of that assembly, to whom the idea of setting aside the bill, and the substitution in its place of a voluntary self-taxation scheme to liquidate the public debt, seemed to be most welcome. They even went further, and proposed as an improvement on that plan, that out of the whole population of British India, estimated at eighteen crore of people, only one crore of the more respectable and opulent class be selected, and a sum of Rs. 100 be levied from each individual; thus a sum of 100 crore of rupees may be realised in a short time. Should the above scheme be carried out, and Government put in possession of this large sum of money, its present annual expenditure will be considerably reduced, since, the public debt being liquidated, an enormous sum of money (being several crores of rupees, paid at present as interest, will be saved to the state. Since the proceedings for the execution of this scheme are not to be confined to a single place or district, but equally to pervade all the districts of Bengal, Behar, Orissa, Oude, Punjab, Scinde, Bombay, Madras, &c., it is deemed advisable, for experiment's sake, to begin in one zillah and lay the result before Government. Although intelligent and clever people are to be found in every part of India, in Bengal, and particularly in Calcutta, there is a greater preponderance of that class of men fully experienced in the customs and usages of the country. It seems therefore most expedient to commence operations in Calcutta. Government aid in carrying this scheme into effect successfully, will undoubtedly be necessary, but to expect Government functionaries to lead the way would be to place them in a humiliating position so contrary to the dignity of Government. It would consequently be desirable that with the subjects of Government, viz., the people themselves, should originate the scheme under consideration, and the result laid before the Government for consideration and adoption in other districts by means of Government functionaries.—Yours, AMEER ALLEE.—Nov. 7, 1859.

BEHAR.—Great changes are on the tapis. Mr. Atherton, the judge of Chuprah, has his pension, and will leave the district in May. In him we shall lose an upright judge, practical philanthropist, and a true Christian. Rumour has it that his place will be filled by Mr. E. Latour, the additional judge of Behar. Mr. Balfour leaves Tirhoot, to the great regret of all who have known him during his sojourn in the district. W. McDonnell goes home, it is said, on furlough. Young Lockwood, the Patna assistant, is acting as collector at Gya, during D. Cunliffe's absence, and W. V. G. Tayler has been sent to keep the budmashes of Norvada in order. All Shahabad is laid low with fever and ague, and the offices at Buxar are almost closed. Hurkishien Singh's trial draws to a termination. The gallant rifles have left Arrah, and the district is in the hands of the Sikhs. Patna is in that state of stagnation usually described as "ditch-water," and I fear will never be merry or sociable again, at all events until some changes take place in the heavenly bodies. At Dinapore the brigadier is actively employed in sanitary improvements, and, report says, projects the formation of a race-course at Patna, too; roads are looking up, under the exertion of Mr. Hope. The sufferers during the mutiny are anxiously looking out for the next move in the "compensation drama." The selection of Mr. Pierce Taylor as superintendent is a good one, as there is not a better or more conscientious officer in India. The union of the two offices of magistrate and collector is a failure. If the non-regulation system were introduced it would succeed; as it is, it is incongruous, and is an obvious step backwards. Mr. Grant will soon have evidence to prove the soundness of his opposition to the measure.—Englishman.

ALLAHABAD, Nov. 10.—The Lieutenant-governor N. W. P. leaves on Sunday evening on his tour; Major Hazlewood follows next morning with his honour's horses. Captain Glubb has been appointed assistant military-secretary to Government N. W. P., and accompanies the Lieutenant-governor. It is not yet known who will succeed to the appointment of A. D. C. and private secretary, now vacant by the death of Captain Meham so barbarously murdered in Kohat. The latest scandal here is, that some one, an officer in the Royal Artillery, it is said, when at the Cawnpore Hotel, forced himself into the room in which Sir Barnes Peacock was sleeping, and was instantly attacked by Sir Barnes' dog. The intruder kicked the dog, then took him up and flung him at the chief justice, who remonstrating on the violence and insolence of the person who had thus forced his way in, was immediately assaulted by him. The fellow, I cannot call him officer, said something very strong about Sir B. P.'s eyes, and then pulled his nose! If this is a sample of the "royals in India," it is high time for the commander-in-chief to interfere. I hear that Sir Barnes offered a reward of Rs. 1,000 for the apprehension of the riotous party who so assaulted him; surely no officer would wait for the discovery of his secret.

THE INDIAN TELEGRAPH.—Lord Stanley desired that experiments should be made, in India, to what distance direct communication could be made through the electric telegraph lines. The following remarkable returns we take from the telegraph reports, which are as wonderful feats as anything we have yet heard of the electric telegraph:—"Direct correspondence was carried on this day for the first time between Calcutta and Bombay, through the Benares, Agra, and Indore line. Bombay reports that they are in direct communication with Kurrachee also. The exchange of questions and answers between Calcutta and Bombay, distance by the line 1,600 miles, took place as rapidly and distinctly as between Calcutta and Barrackpore, distance fourteen miles. The experiments were carried on successfully even beyond Bombay, through Poona, Belgaum, and Bellary, to Bangalore; total distance 2,300 miles by the line. W. B. O'SHAUGHNESSY, Superintendent of Electric Telegraphs in India.—Calcutta, Electric Telegraph Office, Nov. 15, 1859.

SOUTER'S HORSE.—The men of Souter's To-wannah Horse were paid up to, and disbanded on, the 1st of November, with a gratuity of three months' pay.

GORUCKPORE, Nov. 9.—Five men, eight women, and three children, Christian drummers and their families, were sent in here yesterday by Major Renny, 3rd Seikh Infantry, who commands the troops on the Goruckpore frontier. They arrived in that officer's camp at Jawur on the 4th, having been sent in by the Goorkha authorities. They belonged to the 1st, 17th, 74th N.I. Regts., and had been with the rebels ever since their respective regiments mutinied at Cawnpore, Azimghur, and Delhi. The men saved their lives by becoming Mussulmans, and had Mahomedan names given to each of them. They followed the fortunes of the Nana and the Begum, and marched with the rebel troops wherever they went. After the retreat of the respective forces of the Nana and the Begum into Nepaul, they performed cooly work for the rebels, and were all along kept separate from their women and families, and under a guard whilst in the Dhang valley. A Nepaul sirdar hearing of their being there sent for them, and placed them in Tara Ghunna, about three months ago. Whilst in his charge they were well fed, and clothed in Nepaul costume; they saw nothing of the family of the Nana, and do not know if any one of European origin is in the late Nana's zenana. There are, however, a few more half-castes somewhere or other in the rebel camp, one particularly, named Eliza, the daughter of a Sergeant-major of some corps that was massacred at Cawnpore, she is fair and about sixteen years old; a sepoy, named Neebbee Bux, 1st N.I., took her away when the regiment mutinied. For some time the men were confined by the sepoys in their quarter-guard, but afterwards they were allowed partial freedom. Some of the drummers that could write English were killed by the rebels from fear of their communicating intelligence. One who is now dead became a confidential servant of Bala Rao; they state that, as they were being brought down from Tara Ghunna by the Nepaulese, on their way into the Sikh camp, they saw an elephant, some horses, &c., that were being sent as presents to the Bramins on the death of the Nana by his own family. Jawalapersaud, who commands the rebel troops now, is very ill from the Terai disease, and will very likely die. At Cawnpore the mutiny broke out on the appearance of the rebel 2nd cavalry, and the rebels entirely obeyed the commands of the Nana. Sir Hope Grant is going down to Calcutta on privileged leave. It is probable he will not return to Fyzabad, but will remain in Calcutta till it is time to proceed to China to take command of the force. Colonel Holiditch, H.M.'s 20th, is to assume command of the troops at Fyzabad. Brigadier Christie has been ordered to relieve Col. Rowcroft at Goruckpore, the latter having applied for leave to Europe. The cordon of troops along the Terai on the Oude and Goruckpore frontier are quietly but surely contracting the space and freedom of the rebels; and now the Nepaulese troops are on the move we hope soon to hear of the entire destruction of the different rebel bands. A party of rebels on the 6th were attacked on the Arrah river, but only about twenty were killed. Part of the 50th (Queen's) have been ordered on to Lotun with a regiment of Hodson's horse. The remainder of the 54th are at Bansee. Major Macmullen's Police corps have been ordered to Neemuch on their being relieved at Goruckpore by a corps of Juzailchees, under the command of Captain Tonnochy, of H.M.'s 81st.—Englishman.

THE NEW TRUSTEES of the Bengal Mariners and General Widows' Fund notify that they are prepared to pay a first dividend of 75 per cent.

LABOUR IN ASSAM.—To meet the want of native labour in the tea districts of Assam, the Englishman urges Government to prohibit the growth of the poppy by the natives. The unlimited use of opium from childhood unfits the people for toil. In addition to this the land-tax should be increased to give them a motive for exertion, and the rules for clearing waste lands made more strict and regularly enforced. There is no want of labour in Assam.

LAUDABLE CURIOSITY.—Two natives, Ameen Chund, at present Extra Assistant Commissioner in the Settlement Department, and Moonshree Zoolficar Ally, Tehseeldar of Rawul Pindee, have applied to the local authorities, for permission to visit England and the continent of Europe for one year. The former is described as a man of liberal and enlarged ideas, and one singularly free from all caste prejudices. He was an elve of Mr. Cust, the present Commissioner of Umritsur, and, we have reason to believe, is a faithful and highly meritorious officer, far in advance of many of his countrymen in intellect and capacity. He has travelled, it is said, through Bombay, Ajmere, Jypore, Agra, and several other places, and the results of his peregrinations have been set forth in a book, which he published in the vernacular not long ago, and which we hear is generally well spoken of. His knowledge of the English language is however somewhat scant, whereas his companion, the Moonshree, is reported to possess a very creditable acquaintance with it. It is this circumstance which renders it especially desirable that the Hindoo and the Mahomedan should travel together.—Lahore Chronicle.

RATHER INCONSISTENT.—Two regiments of Mooltanee and Pathan cavalry are immediately to be formed at Peshawur and Meean Meer under Colonel Cureton and Lieutenant Lind. Captain Smith's Pathan horse has arrived at Lahore, and was to proceed to Peshawur to be disbanded with a gratuity, their services not being required.

WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.—The Hurkaru observes that an application was made on Monday, Nov. 14, by Mr. Longueville Clarke, for a writ of habeas corpus, to bring up the body of Mr. Brooks, a British subject employed as an Inspector of River Police at Diamond Harbour, said to be now illegally detained by Mr. Betts, a Justice of the Peace and Deputy Magistrate of the same place. The facts of the case are stated to be as follows:—Mr. Brooks is accused of having embezzled wrecked property, and on such accusation he has been kept in close custody in his own house, guarded by peons since the 27th Sept. last, without either being committed or discharged at once as he should be. Moreover, he is not permitted to communicate with his attorney. The court granted a rule nisi to be served on the Deputy Magistrate to show cause why the writ should not issue.

MUMMOO KHAN.—The Oude Gazette states that Mummoo Khan has been disgraced and turned adrift by the Begum, because he would not go out to fight against the Oude police. If the ex-dancing-girl has sense, she will send after Mummoo, and have him put into chains and delivered up to the British authorities as a peace offering on her own behalf. To Mummoo Khan more than any other native were the cowardly executions of the Dhowra and Bithowle captives due.

TABLE OF PRECEDENCE.—The Gazette publishes a notification, in which the Governor-general directs the order of precedence to be observed in future at all durbars for the reception of native chiefs and gentlemen:—"On the right hand of the Viceroy will be seated either the native chief for whose reception the durbar is held, or the secretary to the Government of India in the foreign department, according to the orders for the occasion. Next will follow the other native chiefs, and others according to their rank. On the left hand of the Viceroy his excellency the Commander-in-chief; the local civil authority; the other secretaries to the Government of India according to their rank; the chief of the staff; the chief local military authority; other local civil authorities, not holding a lower office than that of commissioner of a division; heads of departments of the army staff, and all other civil and military officers according to their relative rank. The personal staff of the Viceroy and Governor-general, of the Commander-in-chief, and of all other civil and military officers, will be seated behind the Viceroy."

JUVENILE REFORMATORIES.—The Indian Field recommends the establishment of reformatories in connection with the Mofussil gaols for juvenile offenders. There is scarcely a large town, bazaar, or gunge where they do not abound. At least ten per cent. of the criminal population are under sixteen years of age. It is they who are guilty of most of the petty larceny; when flogged or imprisoned, they take new steps in criminal life, and ultimately become, as budmashes, the terror of a district. Dr. Buist, at much personal expense, succeeded in doing good through the School of Industry, now known in Bombay as the David Sassoon Institution.

POSTMASTER OF FUTTEHGHUR.—The Lucknow Herald says that the postmaster of Futtehghur, Mr. Phillips, has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 600, for opening letters and banghy parcels, and abstracting the contents of the latter.

OPEN LOANS.—The "approximate" statement of subscriptions to the open loans since 1st May last, gives the following:— $\frac{5}{4}$  per Cent. Loan, opened under Notification, dated 20th April, 1859, (cash, Rs. 1,32,31,500; transfer, Rs. 1,29,37,900), Rs. 2,61,69,400. Treasury Bills, at  $\frac{2}{4}$  Pie per Cent. per diem, issued under Notification, dated 30th April, 1859, Rs. 2,09,98,600. That is,  $\frac{3}{4}$  millions sterling of cash from both the  $\frac{5}{4}$  per Cent. Loan and the Treasury Bills.

THE ASIATIC SOCIETY OF BENGAL have resolved to issue a new series of the "Bibliotheca Indica." It will begin with the "Surya Siddhanta," the great Sanscrit work on Astronomy, translated by Pundit Bapu Deva, of Benares, and the "Surya Siromani," a shorter treatise, both edited by Archdeacon Pratt. The Archdeacon should throw some new light on the time when the "Surya Siddhanta" was written. Was Bentley right in placing it so late as between A.D. 1000 and 1200?

BETHUNE SOCIETY.—The first meeting of the Bethune Society, Calcutta, after its recess, was held on the 11th November. As President Dr. Duff delivered an address on the history of the society, sketching also the course of native education, and the career of Rammohun Roy. He suggested the division of the society into sections for the collection of information on education, the physical sciences, Sanscrit and Bengali literature, &c., each section to have one native and one European President. The plans adopted are likely to be successful in giving new life to the society, and promoting its great object of uniting educated natives and Europeans more closely.

QUEEN'S MILITARY WIDOWS' FUND.—The official account of the Queen's Military Widows' Fund for 1858-59 shows the amount of receipts to be Rs. 44,859, and of disbursements Rs. 34,275, leaving a cash balance of Rs. 10,584. At the beginning of the year the cash balance was Rs. 8,421, and the Government donation Rs. 6,400, so that the expenditure has exceeded the subscription. The relief granted to the families of deceased officers by this institution since its establishment in 1820 to 30th June, 1859, amounts to Co.'s Rs. 9,72,864.

EXPORTS (Calcutta, Nov. 22).—There has been no activity in our export market since our last report, and business continues in a very unsatisfactory state. The high prices of almost all articles, and the discouraging accounts received from home, have checked the little revival manifested some time ago. There is hardly an article that could be shipped at or under home prices. Indigo market opens favourably, as before. Sugar a dead letter for the home markets. Saltpetre in small supply, and considerably over London rates. Rum still flat, and also above home valuations. Corals ditto. Oil seeds in moderate supply and demand. Jute in fair demand at full prices.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Nov. 22).—The general position of the market continued very dull and quiet during the last fortnight. Accounts from the principal up-country markets are discouraging, both for the consumption and for prices. In fact, it appears that the consumption of piece goods throughout India has considerably declined from its very high position; and this is proved by the more or less considerable stocks accumulated both here and in the interior. The demand for Bombay is very nearly at an end, and for all these reasons prices of Piece Goods declined lately, and there are no prospects of any improvement at present. Yarns are quiet and lower in prices. Metals steady.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE TRAMBACHERRI GHAT.—An additional sum of Rs. 15,940 has been sanctioned by the Madras Government, for completing the trace of the Trambacherri ghat, in Wynaad, to a width of ten feet. In granting the sanction, the Government explain that in their proceedings of the 11th July, they decided upon adopting this pass as the most important for Wynaad interests, and recognising the necessity of opening the communication without delay, they directed the early completion of this trace. It is not considered probable, however, that the work will be completed within the current official year; but the Chief Engineer at Madras has instructions to resume it in May 1860 if any portion remain unfinished.

OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE.—A curious circumstance connected with the power of public officers to frank official correspondence has just been brought to the Hurkar's notice. A few days ago the Governor of Madras franked some letters to London. The postal authorities at Bombay detected the mistake, and wrote to the Government of Madras to the effect that, as the names of the Governors of the Presidencies are not inserted in the list of officers authorised to frank letters, they will be under the painful necessity of refusing to forward such letters in future. The copies of correspondence between the two Governments were then transmitted by Sir Charles's private secretary to the Director-general of Post-offices, who was of opinion that as his Honour personally has not the privilege of franking letters, he should pay for such letters, and charge the amount in contingent bills.

TEA CULTIVATION IN TRAVANCORE.—Letter from General Cullen, dated 27th October.—Adverting to the correspondence recently published on the introduction of the tea plant at Coonoor, it may not be without interest to the Government to know that the tree thrives well in the Travancore territory, both at the level of the sea, and at altitudes of 1,800 and 3,200 feet. I first met with it in the coffee plantations of Mr. Huxham, in the year 1841, on the route from Quilon to Courtallum, at a farm called Caldoorty, about 40 miles inland, and 600 or 700 feet above the sea. There were some 10 or 15 trees, from 20 to 25 and 30 feet high. They were, I believe, introduced during the government of Mr. Lushington, who, I believe, also introduced those formerly at Kaitee on the Neilgherries. I procured plants from Mr. Huxham and put them down in an experimental spice garden which I had established some 12 years ago, at 1,800 feet, on a hill in the south of Travancore near Oodagherry. There are now trees of 20 to 30 feet high, growing vigorously, and I have about 400 plants, procured from their seed, growing on another hill near the Tinnevely frontier, at an elevation of 3,200 feet. There can be no doubt, therefore, of the facility of its introduction, although, from the moderate altitudes and great atmospheric moisture of the localities hitherto selected, they may possibly be considered to grow more luxuriantly than is desirable; but which, if a defect at all, can probably be easily remedied by selecting ground more to the eastward at greater altitudes, and with a less humid climate. But Travancore and Sicar Cochin also, has extensive tracts of high land, varying in altitude from 2,500 to upwards of 5,000 feet, and with every variation in the fall of rain from 150 to 200 inches on the west, to eighty in the middle, and forty on the east of these table-lands. I allude more particularly to the Cardamom hills of Travancore, a tract of high land from fifty to sixty miles in length from north to south, and ten to twenty-five miles in breadth from east to west, a region to which I had the honour to draw the attention of Government in a report No. 17 of 5th May, 1846, when submitting an address from the mercantile community of Cochin on the heavy British duties on the produce of these States.

SOLDIERS' REST-HOUSES.—The Government of Madras has issued a set of regulations for soldiers' rest-houses and travelling by transit. These rest-houses are under European pensioners, and in them the cattle in transit are changed, and soldiers rationed. The men are not allowed to remain at each longer than three hours, except under urgent circumstances. Weekly reports of arrivals and departures are to be made to the Quartermaster-general, to serve as a check upon charges for conveyance, &c. Officers travelling at the public expense with their families may use them, paying for the refreshment furnished. The plan is a good one. It simply adapts the dak bungalow system for troops, and places a European pensioner in charge instead of a Khansamah. But for eight months of the year there will be no movements of troops.

THE RELIGIOUS NEUTRALITY MEMORIAL.—The reply of the Secretary of State to the memorial from the natives of the presidency of Madras, in which they dwelt at length on the necessity of an undeviating neutrality, in religious matters, on the part of Government and its officers, and in which they sought for the abolition of educational grants in aid, and the prohibition of Government officers from taking an official part in missionary proceedings, has been received. To the first part Sir C. Wood replies by referring the memorialists to the neutrality clause in the Queen's proclamation, adding that her Majesty's Government will adhere to the principles therein declared. To the second point the answer is, that the memorialists have failed to establish their case. And to the third, it is replied that the communications which have already been sent out to this country, render any further instructions unnecessary.

THE PEOPLE'S PARK.—A committee, consisting of Mr. Hooper, Mr. Rohde, Major Worster, Captain Hitchens, Colonel Reid, Colonel Simpson, and Doctor Montgomery, has been appointed by Government to superintend the arrangements for this park. They have accordingly issued instructions for the making of roads, draining the ground, and so forth.

ABOLITION OF IMPRESSMENT.—The subject of "impressment" has been taken up in earnest by the Madras Government, who have declared that it is to cease. Whenever a regiment is moved from one station to another, it has been the custom to seize all the carts and carter in the neighbourhood, and to drag them away from their occupations, willy-nilly. The consequence of this has been that the service has become "odious" to the people, and to remedy the great evils produced by it, magistrates have been directed to substitute contract for compulsion, and to see that the contractors are properly protected.

THE MADRAS VOLUNTEER GUARDS have resolved to found a club for the encouragement of athletic sports. The sports are to be held every Saturday and on every public holiday in different parts of Madras, and occasionally the whole club are to compete for prizes on the island. No detail of the sports is given, but we fear an entrance fee of one rupee and a monthly subscription of four annas will not be sufficient to provide at different places first-class gymnastic apparatus as in the French schools. All should learn the regular gymnastic exercises and be trained in unison.

MR. GARRETT.—We are glad to notice the appointment of Mr. Garrett, Missionary in Bangalore, to the office of Director of Public Instruction in Mysore. Mr. Garrett's labours in education, his thorough knowledge of the vernacular, and his popularity with all classes of the Canarese, point him out as well fitted for the post. General Cubbon's nomination is said to have been sanctioned by the Governor-general.

MILITARY RETRENCHMENT.—Two steps towards economy in matters military in Madras have been taken. The first step is the breaking up of the 2nd extra regiment from the date of the arrival of the 17th M.N.I. at Palamcottah. Native commissioned and non-commissioned officers, naigues and drummers, who were transferred from other regiments, are to return and be borne as supernumeraries upon them, until absorbed by vacancies. The privates are to be divided among thirty-eight of the regular regiments of Native Infantry. The other economical measure to which we have adverted is the abolition of the brigades at Vellore, Trichinopoly, Bellary, and Rangoon, which is to take effect on the 31st of December; and of the command on the Neilgherries, which is to take place as soon as possible. The fort adjutancies at Trichinopoly, Bellary, Vellore, and Masulipatam, are likewise to be done away with, and in lieu thereof station staff officers are to be appointed. Brigade majors, who are to act under the orders of the general officer commanding the division, are to replace the abolished brigadiers.

MADRAS RAILWAYS.—The management of the Madras Railway must be very faulty. At Trivellore, on a recent occasion, the passenger-carriages were unlinked from the luggage-vans for the purpose of adding another. They were not linked on again; the engine started, and half-an-hour elapsed before either passengers or station-master discovered their plight. The engine returned from the next station on noticing the mistake. On another occasion the pointsman at Perembore so bungled the business of turning the down train from Goriattum into a siding that several carriages were thrown off the rails.

TRADE WITH THE PERSIAN GULF.

Few persons, we expect, have been at the pains of getting an accurate idea of the trade of Bombay with the coasts that lie around it. It is vaguely known that the trade with China consists only of the export of opium and cotton, with Mauritius in the export of grain and oils, and with the Arabian and Persian Gulf in the export of piece goods, metals, &c.; but no European in Bombay is perhaps aware of the details of the trade that centres in this place, as the emporium whence the coasts of Arabia and Persia draw their chief foreign supplies. Let us glance at the nature of our trade with the Persian Gulf, a trade that has forced itself upon us in spite of the apathy of Government, and the indifference of the merchant. We are to this hour virtually as far removed from Persia as we are from New Zealand, by the absence of all regular communication therewith. Although a trifling subsidy would suffice to open regular communication with Abbas, Bassadore, Bharon, Bushire, Bussora, Lingee, Muscat, Quet, and Shore, and would double the trade within two years, we are content to allow the vessels of the steam companies of the place to rot in harbour, rather than turn them to account by an expenditure that would be repaid twenty fold. The Persian buggalows that found their way down to Bombay in the last season, came laden with the following freight:—

Drugs .. ..	Rs. 1,40,000
Fruits .. ..	7,80,000

Silver .. ..	16,00,000

Rs. 85,00,000

A glance at this table will show the reader what are the staple articles the Persian brings down to barter against the goods we have to offer. But he wants more goods from us than we do from him, and of the eighty-five lakhs he brings, it will be seen that thirty-five are specie. In the official year 1857-58 the specie brought down from the Persian Gulf to this port was forty-five lakhs. Let us now glance at the wants of the Persian—the articles which he comes to purchase in exchange for his wares. These divide themselves naturally into two classes, the products of India, for which Bombay is the natural market, and the products of other lands, for which Bombay is only the emporium. Of the first of these he bought as follows:—

INDIAN PRODUCE.

Books and stationery .. ..	Rs. 42,000

Now it is certain that were regular and rapid communication established between the gulf and Bombay, wants so important as are indicated in this long list of exports would lead to an indefinite extension of the demand. We suppose that we may hazard the statement safely, that there is not a European merchant in Bombay who has ever visited the gulf, or who dreams of visiting it—seeing that it is virtually as unapproachable as New Zealand. Instead of its ports being brought by steam into easy communication with us, the shores of the gulf are a terra incognita to us all. Why does not the Chamber of Commerce take the initiative in such a matter? We pointed out some weeks ago the amazing effect produced upon our trade with South America, as soon as regular communication was opened therewith. From 1840 to 1850 English imports from Brazil made no increase, and our total exports thereto during the same decade were stationary, at about two and a half millions sterling annually. In 1850 the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company was subsidised to open regular mail communication with its ports, and let the reader who is interested in the progress of India mark the result. In 1851, the very next year, British exports to Brazil rose forty per cent., and in 1854 they had advanced one hundred per cent. Our total trade with Brazil up to 1850 averaged £3,645,833 annually; in 1855 it had reached £8,162,455. Within five years after the first line of steamers were established the trade has risen from three to eight millions sterling.—Bombay Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PORTUGUESE LITERATURE seems to be reviving and in Bombay. A Mr. Viveiros, a clerk there, has written several Portuguese plays. The "excellent corps of Indo-Lusitanian amateurs" announce that they will produce his opera, "O Templo da Morte ou O Mudo Orfao," The Temple of Death, or the Dumb Orphan; and his farce "Un Par de Pombas," A Pair of Pigeons; and present all who purchase tickets for the performance with a photographic likeness of the author. Camoens wrote his Lusiad, the only first-class poem in the language, in Macao.

PRESENCE OF MIND.—A case of intrepidity is related by the Bombay Times, which deserves notice. It appears that while a party of fifty persons of the Jewish community, including some of the members of the Sassoon family, were engaged in conversation, previous to prayer, Mr. Reuben unwittingly roused from its repose a large cobra di capello, which at once pounced on the disturber. Eluding its grasp, the young man caught the cobra in the middle of its body, but it darted off with a violent jerk, and again turned upon its assailant. Mr. Reuben, however, held the cobra a second time in his hand, and giving it a swing in the air, struck its head against the ground several times, and killed the dangerous reptile, much to the admiration of the Jewish gentlemen present on the spot. The Sassoon family have presented Mr. Reuben a purse of Rs. 300 for this rare exhibition by him of manly courage and intrepidity.

SLAVE TRADE AT ZANZIBAR.—We learn from a letter in the Bombay Times that, notwithstanding the liberal professions of the present King of Portugal, and the binding character of former treaties with Britain, the slave trade is still encouraged at Zanzibar. On the 27th of August last a large ship, under Spanish colours, sailed from the Portuguese port of Eboos with 1,200 slaves. Need we wonder at Dr. Livingstone's statement as to the degrading effect of the Portuguese government on the African tribes, or at the fact that though Portugal has had Mozambique for 300 years, no Portuguese dare go five miles from the town unarmed.

SANITARIUM FOR UPPER SIND.—Sir Bartle Frere has directed the attention of the Bombay Government to Roheyl, five stages from Sehwan, as a sanitarium for Upper Sind. There are no hot winds, and the thermometer stands at 10° less than in Kurrachee. The place is well suited for the residence of the deputy-collector of the district, who has hitherto been compelled by the intolerable heat to pass several months at Kotree, 100 miles from the nearest part of Sehwan. When the place has been further surveyed, Government may sanction expenditure for bungalows.

STEAMERS FOR INDIAN RIVERS.—Sir Bartle Frere has drawn the attention of the Government of Bombay to a suggestion in the Times from Valparaiso, that steamers with stern paddle-wheels be used for Indian rivers. "The machinery of a stern wheel boat is extremely simple and cheap, generally consisting (for a boat to carry 100 tons cargo) of two high-pressure engines of five feet stroke and 13 inches bore, the total expense of such a boat, drawing 20 inches when loaded, being about dolls. 15,000 in the States. In addition to her cargo she can tow several lighters at a much greater speed than a side wheel of the same power can move herself only in shallow water. The use of the latter has, therefore, from experience been entirely abandoned in the upper waters of the Sacramento, and it has been found necessary to do the same on the Columbia and Welhamet rivers, while the side wheel will probably never be tried in the shallows of Frazer river." The Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy approves of the plan, and suggests such steamers should be constructed in America and shipped to India in pieces. But the stern paddle-wheel was used in England before it was known in America.

EDUCATION IN BOMBAY.—Of the 128 candidates who were examined for matriculation in the Bombay University, only twenty-two—all Hindoos—passed. Our readers may remember many of the questions were such as could be answered by the highest class in an English dame-school. In Bombay the University is, we fear, premature. There are no "Provincial High Schools of a superior order," and but a very small number of "superior English schools," to act as its feeders. In reviewing the Report of Educational Operations in the year 1857-58, issued only in August, 1859, the Bombay Government says, whether or not with gratulation it is difficult to discover:—"It is certain that the progress which has been made in the establishment of schools for females under this Presidency has been entirely independent of Government support, and it is no less certain that the remarks of Lord Ellenborough on missionary schools do not apply to this Presidency, where there are is no instance of a public grant-in-aid being extended to such schools." The Bombay Standard accounts for the fact that not a Parsee passed the first matriculation examination of the Bombay University thus. The Parsees have no proper vernacular. They speak a dialect of Guzerati formed of Persian and Arabic elements, which is not grammatical, and has no literature. The pure Guzerati is the language of the Marathis, and is derived from the Sanscrit. In this pure form of Guzerati they were examined, and of course failed. Why was the question of vernacular not settled beforehand by the examiners? Of those who did pass fourteen came from the Elphinstone Institution; seven from Poona College; and one from Surat. Dr. Wilson's mission school sent up only Parsees. As the object of the Bombay director of public instruction is to train keranees and not scholars, we cannot expect education to be advanced in Bombay.

A CHRISTIAN POOJAH.—On October 12 the Governor-general of Portuguese India and other dignitaries held their Xavier Poojah, and issued a State bulletin, in which the sublime farce of inspecting the dead saint's remains is described. The following are the interesting results:—"The cranium on the right side contains but few hairs, and on the left none at all; the face is covered with dry and somewhat dark skin, with an aperture on the right side, communicating with the antrum of the superior maxilla bone, or upper jaw, which seems to correspond to the place of the contusion referred to in the Act, dated the 1st January, 1782. Of the visible teeth only one of the lower incisors is wanting; both the ears are sound; the right arm is wanting, and the left hand is entire, the nails included, much in the same state as it is indicated in the last-named Act; the abdominal walls or parietes are covered with dry skin, the belly not containing intestines; the feet are covered with skin also dry and somewhat dark, the saliency of the tendons being visible; the fourth and fifth toes of the right foot are wanting. There are, however, remaining some portions of the skin belonging to them in a very spongy state." In the face of all this it was determined that the body and the reliques of the said saint "were in a fit state of being exposed for public veneration in order to excite and augment the devotion of the people." Of her once great Eastern possessions Portugal now has but four little spots. Can we wonder at it?

A VISIT TO BEYT AND DWARKA.—We understand that the late Commissioner, Sir Bartle Frere, and the party that accompanied him, paid a visit to Beyt and Dwarka on their voyage to Bombay. At the former place they landed, and found the temple and fort in ruins, having been blown up after the storming party had taken possession. Amongst the débris, one of the gentlemen, who seems not to have forgotten his old friends in Kurrachee, discovered lying prostrate on the ground, two handsomely carved doors of the most elaborate native workmanship. The pedestals are formed by two elephants, and out of the backs rise ornamental carved door-posts. As they were likely to be used for no better purpose than rubble, or perhaps converted into building material for some temporary tenement, the gentleman referred to, at once perceiving their value, both as a relic of this once renowned spot, and as a unique specimen of antique industrial art, immediately resolved to appropriate them to a far better object. He managed to get them conveyed on board one of the steamers, and has sent them to Kurrachee as a present to our museum. We believe they arrived in harbour on Saturday last, and will be immediately placed in a fitting position in the Institution to which they have been so considerably handed over. The donor of this precious contribution to our scanty store of antiquities is entitled to the best thanks of the community for his thoughtfulness in the presentation of this souvenir.—Kossid.

TEMPLE PROPERTY AT BEYT AND DWARKA.—From Lieutenant L. C. Barton, Assistant Resident, Baroda, on duty in Kattiawar, to H. L. Anderson, Esq., Secretary to Government, Bombay. Camp, near Dwarka, October 28th, 1859. Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 4,307, of the 19th instant, enclosing a petition from a large number of respectable merchants of Bombay, and in reply beg that you will assure the Right Hon. the Governor in Council that I am doing everything in my power for the protection of property both at Beyt and Dwarka. Government has doubtless learnt from the despatches of Lieutenant Colonel Donovan that some of the temples at Beyt from their position were involved in the destruction of the Fort of Beyt; that the temple images were removed beforehand by the priests, and are now at their disposal; and that all valuable property that was pointed out was removed to a place of safety, pending the orders of Government for its restoration or otherwise. I have already, on the 19th instant, written to the Resident of Baroda, begging him to move Government that this property may be restored to its rightful owners. Owing to press of business, I have not been able to visit Beyt myself yet, but I have deputed an agent there to set matters in order against my arrival. Colonel Scobie, commanding the field force, has issued the most stringent orders to the troops under his command to respect all property, and especially temple property, at Dwarka. I had an interview with the Bombay deputation early this morning, after which the members proceeded to Beyt.—I have, &c., LIONEL C. BARTON.

THE REV. JOSEPH TAYLOR.—The Bombay Times announces with deep regret the death of the Rev. Joseph Taylor, of the London Missionary Society. This venerable minister of the Gospel breathed his last on Saturday morning, after a lingering illness of some days, at the advanced age of sixty-seven. The best portion of his life was spent at Belgaum, devoted to the preaching of the Gospel, both to Europeans and natives. Old age and consequent debility obliged him, a short while ago, to retire from the Mission with which he had been so long connected, and he came to Bombay to his relations, to whom he was much attached. Notwithstanding his years and weakness, he occasionally preached in the Established and Free Churches of Scotland, and his sermons were characterised by a fervour and an earnestness seldom surpassed. His remains were consigned to their last resting-place on Saturday evening, at the English burial-ground at Girgaum; and many were those who assembled to pay their respects to the dead. He will long be remembered in Belgaum and Bombay as a faithful minister of the Gospel, and an affectionate friend, endeared to those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance by his kind and affectionate address.

CHINA.

HONG-KONG, Nov. 15.—It is reported that the Americans are already in the field as mediators between China and the two offended European Powers. At least his Excellency Mr. Ward left Shanghai on the 2nd inst., to meet the Governor-general of Kiangsu. Kwanshan, the place of meeting, is where Iliang received Colonel Marshall and Mr. McLane; and the Chinese believe that Ho has been instructed by the Emperor to see if the Americans can do anything to arrange matters with France and England. At the same time the Imperial Government is gathering together its very limited means of defence, lest matters should be pushed to extremity. The scanty supply of rice at Peking, and its consequent high price, may lead to the starvation of myriads of helpless and unoffending persons in the event of energetic measures being adopted by the foreign powers.

From Japan we learn that Mr. Consul-general Alcock has made arrangements at Hakodadi (a small town with few public buildings) for the establishment of the consulship there under Mr. C. P. Hodgson. The currency question has at last been satisfactorily arranged, and itzabues are to be exchanged for Mexicans at the rate of 311 for 100. Increasing confidence exists between foreigners and the Japanese Government. The most important intelligence from Japan is that Commissioners are to be sent from it to the United States, as was provided for in the treaty concluded by Mr. Townsend Harris. It was hardly expected that that clause of the treaty would be carried out, but the Japanese Government has signified its intention of doing so, and has already appointed Commissioners, who are to leave in the Powhattan in February next, the date fixed by the treaty. The mission will consist of two Commissioners, two Censors who have to report on the conduct of the Commissioners, three Lieut.-Governors, eight Generals and Colonels, two Interpreters, two Physicians, and forty servants.

Laou, lately the Acting Governor of Canton, has been made Governor of the Two Kwang, and Kiling, a relative of Ki-ying, and lately Governor of Kiangsu, has been made Governor of Canton city.

We are glad to hear that the liberal scheme of emigration to the West Indies, sanctioned by the British Government, is meeting with success, and that so many families have already been secured, that a large supply may be looked for when the rice crop is all gathered in. It was one of the old China notions that respectable Chinese women could not be got to emigrate at any price; but the native government of Kwang-tung has co-operated in the regulation of the traffic, and much has been effected by the activity of European gentlemen who know the peasantry well, and enjoy their confidence. Laou, the new governor-general, urged by the Commissioners of Canton, promises his active support to emigration so long as it is properly conducted; and nothing will do more than a really good system to check the irregularities and atrocities connected with that to Cuba.—Overland China Mail.

THE LATE DR. KENNY.—We regret much to have to notice the death, at the age of sixty years, of Dr. Bernard Kenny, which occurred here on the morning of Wednesday, October 20th. He had been ill for a few weeks, not so much from any special disease as from a general decay, and it was not expected that he would recover. Dr. Kenny was an old resident in China, and will be regretted by many both here and at home who have been benefited by his medical skill or enjoyed the pleasure of his conversation. In his earlier years he was a pupil of the celebrated Abernethy; and on the last alteration of the charter of the English College of Surgeons, he was one of the members who were advanced to the honour of the fellowship of that college. Before coming to China, about fourteen years ago, Dr. Kenny passed six or seven years in India, and his long experience of tropical climates afforded him peculiar acquaintance with the diseases which are there prevalent. The first part of his residence in China was passed at Whampoa, but he soon removed to Canton, where he remained till driven out by the commencement of the war in 1856, when he lost his laboratory and valuable instruments. He then engaged in practice in Hongkong, and was very valuable as a consulting physician, though the want of firmness attendant on increasing infirmities impaired his usefulness as an ordinary practitioner. In medical knowledge and the theory of therapeutics Dr. Kenny had no equal in China; and to the last he kept himself acquainted, in a surprising manner, with the progress of medical science. He was remarkable for his benevolence, few being aware of the extent of his liberality, and his kind-heartedness was well known. The Catholic missionaries in particular were much indebted to him, and this was recently acknowledged by a testimonial from the French Emperor. In all circles Dr. Kenny was a welcome visitor from his chatty disposition, his extensive information, and unassuming demeanour; and, as in the case of the late Dr. Harland, we have to mourn the loss of one who had endeared himself to many, and who will be followed to the tomb by the blessings of those who could give him no other reward.—China Mail.

CEYLON.

COLOMBO, Nov. 29.—The fortnight has been generally wet and unfavourable for curing and shipping operations. Two vessels have sailed for London, the Trent and the Choice. Those vessels took away 12,360 cwt. of coffee, of which 9,996 were plantation, and 2,364 native. Our exports of plantation are considerably in advance of the corresponding period of last year, while native shows the slightest possible decrease. Our total exports of coffee, cinnamon, and cocoa-nut oil show an advance on previous years.

The operations of the steamer Manchester, since she was purchased for and employed by the Immigration Board, have been so very successful, that, naturally enough, much disgust is expressed at the prospect of having to pay the tax, which a Proclamation in the Gazette has fixed for 1860, at 3s. for every 120 days' labour. An Ordinance has been prepared to extend the period of payment. By the time it is collected, we presume good steamers and good coals will have arrived from England, and we trust that the project of bringing labourers from new and more distant sources may be successful. If not, it is pretty evident that, to induce labourers to come to Ceylon, wages must be raised. To that point we seem drifting.

The Supply Bill for 1860 has been introduced, and although, even in the absence of any prospect of a pearl fishery, the estimates of revenue are good, yet the result of recent additions to our fixed expenditure is seen in the fact, that only a sum of £90,000 is proposed to be devoted to public works, while nearly £200,000 were devoted to the same object in 1859. The four great sources of income are the customs, calculated at £200,000; sales of Government property (including salt, and timber, and other materials issued by the commissariat to public departments, and charged to them), £102,000; licences (chiefly arrack), £100,000; and land revenue (Government share of grain), £85,000. At the head of the minor sources of revenue are rents (chiefly tolls), £50,000; next come stamps, £45,000; and land sales are down for £25,000, although the demand for coffee lands has for the present lull. The natives are now the great buyers. The total revenue of 1860 is put down at £680,000.

Looking at the expenditure, the fixed charges—fixed by her Majesty's Government and by legislative enactment—absorb more than a third of our revenue, leaving less than two-thirds to be voted by the Legislative Council; while, practically, a large portion of the provisional salaries—those of the education, police, and other establishments—are as much fixed as those sanctioned by her Majesty's Government or voted by the Council in No. 1 of 1858. The new schedules for the Northern Province will make some addition to the fixed expenditure. Our financial prospects are not gloomy, but such as to leave room for some anxiety, and certainly such as to render the most careful economy incumbent on those entrusted with the expenditure.

The mail of the 26th October reached Galle on the 20th. Sir Henry Ward took a trip to Galle to meet the Right Hon. James Wilson, who was a passenger.

The result of the court-martial on Ensign Murray, of the Ceylon Rifles, has been that officer's acquittal, while a severe reflection has been cast on the veracity of Ensign L'Estrange. The friends of the latter consider the reflection unjust, and are determined to demand a court-martial for him from the Commander-in-Chief, General Lockyer having refused a request to that effect. The court and the major-general commanding have, in very proper terms, denounced the system of bill-drawing out of which this unhappy affair arose.

To the victims of dysentery in this fatal year we have to add the name of Mrs. Schrader, wife of the chaplain of the Kandian districts.

THE STRAITS.

SINGAPORE, Nov. 21.—H.M.'s Straits steamer Hooghly left this on the 9th for Sarawak, to afford support and confidence to the Europeans there; and we understood that the Hon. the Governor has requested Sir Robert McClure to proceed to that quarter from Batavia as soon as the repairs of the Esk are completed. These prompt measures of the Governor will, we trust, avert all chance of an outbreak.

On the 6th, the French war steamer La Place arrived here from Touron, having on board Admiral Regnault de Genouilly, who intended to proceed to France by the Overland Mail. Unfortunately the Mail steamer Norna reached this a day or two sooner than was expected; and, as she left on the evening of the 5th, Admiral de Genouilly is obliged to remain here for the next fortnightly steamer from China.

Before the La Place left Touron the Captain and twenty-eight of the crew of the American ship Flora Temple arrived there in a boat and reported that the ship had been wrecked on a rock in the China Sea. She had on board 800 coolies, and was from Macao bound to Havana. There were no boats to remove the coolies, and they were left with a supply of food. Admiral de Genouilly at once despatched a large transport for the purpose of trying to save these unfortunate wretches. The crew left the wreck a fortnight before they reached Touron, and during all that time they were on the sea in an open boat.

Mr. Van den Berg, the lessee of the Karimon Islands, some time ago commenced to work the tin there, in terms of his agreement with the Viceroy of Riow. We understand he has found some beds of ore which are very promising, and that he has already smelted a considerable quantity of tin. The health of Mr. Van den Berg, and his work people, during the period they have been on the island, has been very good, and it would seem that they are to escape those attacks of fever which appear to be almost inevitable in opening new locations in tropical countries. The jungle on the islands is said to differ considerably from what we find on Singapore—instead of being almost impenetrable from a mass of brushwood and creepers, as in our jungles—it is comparatively open and clear beneath the high trees, so that one can easily traverse it.

This is not the first time that attempts have been made to render available to commerce the mineral riches of the Karimons. Some forty years ago, the then Tomongong of Singapore had a large establishment there for smelting tin, and he derived a considerable revenue from it. On his death the concern would seem to have passed into the hands of Sultan Hussain of Johore, who, in 1827, had three Europeans superintending the working of the mines at the Karimons. In November of that year the operations were suddenly put a stop to, the agents and workmen of Sultan Hussain being forcibly expelled by Major Elout, the Resident of Riow, and a body of troops, who took possession of the Karimon Islands on behalf of the Sultan of Lingga. From that period no regular attempt was ever made to work the tin mines until Mr. Van den Berg commenced his operations. Mr. Crawford in his "Descriptive Dictionary of the Indian Islands," &c. thus mentions the tin found here. "In a visit which I made to the Little Carimon, in 1824, I procured the finest specimen of alluvial tin that I have ever seen, a round mass of about fifteen pounds weight, which had been very little rolled, with perfect crystals of the oxide."

By late advices from Sarawak we have further particulars of the conspiracy lately discovered there, amongst certain Malays, to assassinate all the Europeans in Sarawak. The conspiracy seems to have been originated more than a year past by the Datu Patingi Gapur, who was deposed from his office some years ago for treason, and who was allowed to return to Sarawak, under the title of Datu Haji, soon after the Chinese insurrection. Ever since his return, while professing the greatest friendship towards Sir James Brooke, this old rascal, who, during the period of his banishment, made a pilgrimage to Mecca, and thereby acquired a greater title to the respect of his co-religionists, has been endeavouring to form a party to replace the Christian by a Mahomedan Government, the preliminary measure proposed for this purpose being the murder of the former. The Datu had evidently been unsuccessful in inducing any number of Malays to join him, and had therefore entered into a league with a Sibuyou Dyak Tuah, named Bayang. The latter was not only known to the Government as a bad character, but had separated from part of his own tribe on account of his jealous and quarrelsome disposition. For months past he has been going about under pretence of trading, but in reality to enlist the co-operation of the Dyaks of Linga and other places. The Chief of the Linga tribe told Bayang that he would never attack the white men who had been his friends, but if the Government gave him permission he would willingly attack and kill the Sibuyous. The plot, which must have been known to many persons, seems to have been kept secret for months, and had it not been for the good feeling towards the Government, and the want of unity and co-operation amongst the conspirators, few, if any, of the Europeans would have been now alive. The chiefs of a branch of Bayang's own tribe at Lundu were the first to report that they had been tampered with by the Datu Haji. They came to Kuching and declared their determination to follow and fight for the Government. The Banjer-massing massacre, in which Dyaks participated, has lately been held out to some of the Dyaks as an incitement to them to rise in Sarawak. They were told that 12,000 white people had been killed in the Banjer-massing territory. As soon as the conspiracy was discovered Mr. Johnson put everything on a war footing. The adherents of Government were mustered, the fort guns were loaded, and Government-house and the gunboat were manned and armed. Many of the people got alarmed when they suddenly perceived the preparations and saw the guns pointing up the Kampongs, and they blamed the Datu Haji as the cause of all. The Chinese traders were all armed and prepared to fight on the side of Government. The Datu Haji and other three ringleaders were at once taken into custody and an enquiry instituted. The Malay Council reported that the Datu was willing to support the Government. The Datu and one of his companions have been banished from Sarawak, and are said to have decided on proceeding to Arabia. They arrived here (Singapore) on the 7th in the schooner Albatross. The latest accounts state that quiet has been in a great measure restored, and that trade was going on as usual. It is evident, however, that the Europeans must be on their guard in future, for it is certain that an inimical feeling towards white men is pervading all Mahomedan countries in the East, which at any moment may result in a sudden outbreak, unless the utmost watchfulness is exercised. Such a state of things is productive of much mischief, especially in a place like Sarawak where the Government is necessarily weak, as a want of confidence is engendered, both on the part of the governors and the governed, which acts most injuriously on the development of the country. This is most unfortunate for Sarawak, where the trade is at the present moment larger than it has ever yet been.—Singapore Free Press.

MR. BLUNDELL.—We regret to learn that Mr. Blundell, recently Governor of the Straits, has lost his eyesight from cataract. The Straits Times says it was the intention of Government to send him to England on a special mission in connexion with the transfer of the settlements to the Crown.

CENTRAL ASIA.

August 18.—The Ameer said that previously four guns were sent to Zoormut, and if there is any necessity for any more, the large gun which has been recently cast, may be sent there. The Topbeshee immediately despatched the large one to Zoormut. The Ameer then ordered Shah Ghassee Shere Ally Khan to have his horses branded, which was accordingly done.—August 19.—Sirdar Mahomed Surwur Khan, son of Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan, represented that his regiment was encamped at Baber Shah, and waited the Ameer's order to march to Zoormut. The Ameer took him aside and advised him to keep his subjects pleased; after which he ordered him to go. Sirdar Mahomed Shereef Khan brought 150 sowars to be reviewed by the Ameer, who expressed himself much pleased by them.—August 20.—A letter from Syud Bhow Khan Badshah, inhabitant of Kehner, was received, stating that the son and brother of the King of Chutrar, having escaped from their country, have arrived in Bajor and intend to proceed to Cabul. The Ameer ordered two letters to be written, one to Syud Bhow Khan, and one to Sandut Khan Moomund, requesting them to send both those persons honourably to Cabul.—August 21.—Sirdar Mahomed Shereef asked the Ameer what was to be done for the wife of the late Sirdar Mahomed Hyder Khan, daughter of Sirdar Mahomed Sultan Khan. The Ameer gave him permission to do as he liked, as she was the property of his brother. Mahomed Shereef Khan went to her house with a jampan and brought her away to his own. The next day he married her himself.—August 23.—A petition of Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan from Tash Kergan was received, stating that he had an intention of going to Tukht Bul, and after serving out the pay of the force there, he will proceed to Koondooz. But that Meer Atalik Beg, with his family, was still at Roostak, from which place he has proceeded to Koolab to pay a visit of friendship to the ruler of that place, who has sent an agent with a letter to Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan.—August 24.—Sirdar Mahomed Shereef Khan has declared that when he returns he will take to himself another of Sirdar Gholam Hyder Khan's wives. The Ameer heard of this and sent word to all Gholam Hyder Khan's wives to beat anyone who may force them to marry. They may marry or not as they please. The Ameer will not interfere in this matter. Sirdar Mahomed Shereef Khan having obtained permission of the Ameer, proceeded to Zoormut, for the people of the tribe Ghilchae Sulleman Khel, inhabitants of Kutha Avez, had rebelled and did not pay the revenue. The Ameer told Sirdar Mahomed Shereef Khan when he had collected the revenue from them to make it over to Sirdar Mahomed Surwur Khan, and then to proceed to Kandahar. The Ameer had it proclaimed in the city that no one should fire guns on the occasion of marriages, as on the preceding night a man had been wounded by a gunshot.—August 25.—Previously the Ameer had been angry with Nadir Khan, Purwanee, and Soofee Khan, for coming away from Koondooz without permission. This day the Ameer summoned them, and said that he had an intention of fining them heavily, and confiscating their jagheers, but that he forgave them now, provided they promised to behave better in future. The Ameer, after reviewing their horses, ordered them to proceed to Koondooz after a stay of eight days at their houses.—August 26.—An Urzee from Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan was received, stating that he had received a letter from Akhwanzadah Sirajooddeen Khan from Koorsh, informing him that the King of Bokhara has paid great regard and honours to him more than previously. He has also ordered an Elehee to accompany him.—August 27.—An Urzee from the ruler of Lughman was received, stating that the inhabitants of the country of Russool Khan were fighting with the inhabitants of Atawalah, and about sixteen men were killed on both sides. The Atawalah people had collected about 500 men of the Kafree tribe, and were disturbing the country. The Ameer sent a reply to the ruler of Lughman, ordering him to keep them quiet till his own arrival at Jellalabad, when he will take measures to restore peace. August 28.—The Ameer was very sorry to hear of the death of Khan Shereen Khan, Juwan Shere Kullan Kuzilbashee. He accompanied the funeral procession to the shrine of Murdan Shah, where the deceased was interred with all the honours due to his rank. The late Khan Shereen Khan died of a pain in the abdomen, which he suffered for five days. The Ameer then proceeded to the house of Meer Ubdul Washe Khan for reading the Fataha over the remains of the late Khwanzadeb.—August 29.—Kullunj Khan Seegane, having escaped from Koondooz, arrived in Cabul and paid his respect to the Ameer. The particulars of his escape are thus related, that in Koondooz a certain woman had a very handsome daughter with whom Sirdah Mahomed Asleem Khan was in love. Kullunj Khan went to that woman's house and forced her daughter from her, on which the said woman complained to the Sirdar. The Sirdar ordered his men to go to Kullunj Khan's house at night and kill him. Some person informed Kullunj Khan of this, on which he escaped the same night. The same day Gholam Hussun Khan Afshar arrived and said, that he had been sent to kill Kullunj Khan. The Ameer said that Sirdar Asleem Khan should not have ordered him to kill Kullunj Khan for a common woman, and persuaded Gholam Hussun Khan never to commit such a deed. Some Kohistanee brought a Hindoo before the Ameer and said that this man had adopted the Mahomedan faith, and now denies having done so. The Ameer made over the man to the Kazee and ordered him to persuade him to embrace Mahomedanism.—August 30.—The Ameer ordered Gholam Mahomed Khan to go to Sirdar Ubdool Ghyas Khan and ask him why he was delaying to proceed to Koondooz. The Sirdar sent in reply that he will march this day. After obtaining permission from the Ameer, he proceeded at once with 124 Sowars and encamped at Peepee, where he will stay a few days.—August 31.—Intelligence from Balkh was received, informing the Ameer that news from Bokhara had arrived to the effect that the King of that place had made terms with the King of Russia, and an agent of the latter had arrived in the city of Bokhara, who was honourably received by the King, and put up in the Serai of Tumakoo, near Charsoo Bazaar. The Hindoo who was made over to the Kazee for conversion to the Mahomedan faith, and would not do so though advised, was brought to the Ameer, who ordered the Kazee to punish him according to the Shurah. The Kazee ordered the Hindoo to be killed by stones, on which he read the Kulma, and became a Mussulman! The Ameer then bestowed a khillut on the converted Hindoo.

Sept. 1.—At about midnight the Ameer became very uneasy from pain in his chest, and sent for Hukeem Daniel, who administered some remedy by which the Ameer received relief. In the morning all the Sirdars came to see the Ameer, and even Sirdar Mahomed Shereef Khan came back from Dehporee to see him, when the Ameer ordered him to recall his troops from their encampment. The Ameer and all the Sirdars went to the house of the late Khan Shereen Khan to read the Fataha.—Sept. 2.—A despatch from Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan was received, stating that the Russian agent has asked for three things from the King of Bokhara:—1st, that the Surai of Tumakoo be given to him for his property and men; 2nd, that the fugitive Hindoos should be ransomed; 3rd, that the Russian troops be allowed to pass through Bokhara on Hindostan, which is in the possession of the English, who are an enemy to the Russians. The king has given his assent to the first two proposals, but to the third he has dissented, saying that if he allowed the Russian troops through his territories, the Mahomedan faith and the Koran will be entirely lost and destroyed, and the Mussulmans will assemble in numbers and disturb his country. The Russian agent has written to the King of Russia all that has passed between the King of Bokhara and himself. On reading this the Ameer summoned Sirdar Mahomed Shereef Khan, and countermanded his march to Kandahar, and requested him to proceed to Koondooz. The Sirdar did not comply with his request, saying that if the country of Toorkistan, which has been conquered by him, is given to him, he will go to Koondooz.—Sept. 3.—An Urzee from Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan states that the people of Koondooz, Tykan, and Khanabad, have assembled in the hill Bundur Shikumush, and some of the people of Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan who had gone there for some business, were either killed or plundered by them. Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan levies a tax of two seers ghee, one goat, one maund wheat flour, and four maunds barley, from each house: they have therefore joined and mutinied, and they have murdered all their chiefs who were appointed by the Sirdar. Mahomed Nuzur, ruler of Tykan, and Rehmutoolah Khan have also rebelled. The Sirdar has sent 1,000 sowars with two guns, under Sirdar Mahomed Zumun Khan, to Tykan, and 600 sowars with two guns, under Nyaz Mahomed Khan, to Khanabad. The same Urzee also states that the King of Bokhara, having assembled a large army, had come to Hissar, of which place he has appointed Ubdool Guffoor Beg, brother of Ubdool Kureem Beg, ruler. He has also an intention of coming to Koondooz and Balkh, and had imprisoned Akoonzadah Sirajooddeen Khan. The Ameer requested Sirdar Mahomed Shereef Khan to send his forces to Koondooz, and ordered Sirdars Sultan Mahomed Khan, Peer Mahomed Khan, Shumssoodeen Kheer, Mahomed Ally Khan, to proceed to that place with 2,000 of his own sowars. Sirdar Mahomed Shereef Khan has ordered his troops to march, and it is not known whether he himself will go or not.—Sept. 12.—This day's hawk brought a letter from Sirdar Shere Ally Khan, informing the Ameer that having made over charge of Kandahar to Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan, and shown him all the troops and artillery, he has left Kandahar and will soon present himself in the Ameer's presence. Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan has kept Mirza Ahmed Khan, Mirza Kullub Ally Khan, Bahadur Khan, brother-in-law of Nazir Naem Khan, and some servants of the late Sirdar Gholam Hyder Khan in his service, and all the people of Kandahar are much gratified with the rule of Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan.—Lahore Chronicle.

JAVA.

The great work of the emancipation of Dutch slaves in Java has begun. The plan adopted is modelled on the Act of 1834, which put emancipated negroes in the British colonies on the footing of apprenticed labourers. By a subsequent Act (1 Vic. c. 19), all apprenticeships were to cease after 1st August, 1840, but the colonial Legislatures passed Acts anticipating the day. In Java the apprenticeship is to last for six years, from the beginning of 1860 to 1866, after which date full liberty will be conceded. Owners receive 150 francs for slaves worth 1,000 francs each, a rate which is looked upon as liberal. Slavery, we believe, does not exist in Java where free labour is cheaper, but is common to all the rest of the Eastern Archipelago. Slaves, with the exception of those belonging to kings, can inherit property and purchase their freedom. They are, like the old Roman slaves, of two classes, bondsmen for life, or bond-debtors who pay their debt by labour. The Government would seem desirous of gradually putting an end to the forced labour system in Java. The holders of sugar contracts have been informed that they cannot receive aid from Government in cutting the cane crops. It is estimated that during the season, when the cane becomes ripe, 40,000 men per day are required on an average to cut it, and it is asserted that without the assistance of Government it will be impossible to procure so many men.

H. E. the right hon. the Viceroy and Gov. gen. held a durbar at Cawnpore on the 3rd inst. for the reception of the Maharaja of Rewah, the chiefs and jaggedars of Bundelcund, and the chiefs and principal residents of the Benares and Allahabad divn. of the N.W. Provinces.

The undermentioned chiefs and jaggedars had private audience of H.E.:—

Raja Deonarain Singh Bahadoor.
The Jageerdar of Jignee.
The Jageerdar of Logassee.
The Jageerdar of Paldeo.
The Jageerdar of Tirawun.

The Jageerdar of Alipoora.
The Jageerdar of Kampta Rijowla.
The Jageerdar of Gouri-har.
The Jageerdar of Nygwan.

On arrival and departure the Maharaja of Rewah received a salute of 17 guns; the Maharaja of Benares a salute of 13 guns; and the Maharaja of Chirkaree a salute of 11 guns.

The Viceroy was pleased to inform the Maharajas of Rewah and Chirkaree, and the Jageerdars of Logassee and Gouri-har, that, in consideration of their loyalty to the British Government, and of the services rendered by them during the rebellion, the Government would, in the event of failure to any one of them of direct heirs, recognise the privilege of adoption according to the ancient customs of their respective families.

Afterwards, the above-mentioned chiefs and jageerdars, and the other native chiefs and gentlemen, together with the principal civil and military officers of the station, having been assembled in general durbar, the Viceroy and Governor-general, accompanied by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, entered and took his seat under a royal salute.

The customary tribute and offerings having been presented and accepted, rewards and khilluts were bestowed on each native chief and gentleman in succession.

The following rewards were given for loyal services during the rebellion:—

To the Maharaja of Rewah, a khillut of the value of Rs. 10,000, and the district of Sohagpoor to him and his heirs in perpetuity.

To the Maharaja of Benares, a khillut of the value of Rs. 10,000, and the honour of an hereditary salute of 13 guns.

To the Maharaja of Chirkaree, a khillut of the value of Rs. 20,000, the Pargunnah of Futtehpore in Shahguri in perpetuity, and the honour of an hereditary salute of 11 guns.

The distinguished services of this chief, who not only adhered firmly to his alliance with the British Government throughout the rebellion, but rendered active assistance to the Queen's troops, and protected the lives of H.M.'s Christian subjects at the imminent and unceasing peril of his own, and to his own great loss, were on this occasion publicly acknowledged by the Viceroy and Governor-general. H.E. was pleased to call the notice of the Commander-in-Chief and of the assembly to the signal devotion shown by the Maharaja to the Queen's Government, in his offer to surrender to the rebels the person of his own son rather than that of a British agent who was under his protection; and H.E. enjoined all British officers who might hereafter enter the territory of the Maharaja to remember these services, and to render to his Highness the respect and consideration which he so eminently deserves.

To the Raja of Nagode, lands in the confiscated estate of Bijoorajguri, yielding Rs. 4,000 a-year.

To Rajah Deonarain Singh Bahadoor of Benares, the title of Rajah Bahadoor, a khillut of the value of Rs. 10,000, and a perpetual assignment on the revenues of the pargunnah of Syedpoor Bhittree.

To Dewan Sirdar Singh, a Jageerdar of Logassi, the title of Rao Bahadoor, a khillut of the value of Rs. 10,000, and a jagere of Rs. 2,000 a-year.

To Nana Hindooput, Jageerdar of Alipoora, a khillut of the value of Rs. 5,000.

To Rajdhar Rooder Singh, Jageerdar of Gouri-har, the title of Rao Bahadoor, and a khillut of the value of Rs. 10,000.

Other minor rewards were given, and those who were not entitled to reward received the usual complimentary khillut.

After the customary ceremonies, H.E. the Viceroy and Gov. gen. left his seat under a royal salute, and the assembly broke up.

The day the Viceroy and Gov. gen. paid a return visit to each of the three principal chiefs, the Maharajas of Rewah, Benares and Chirkaree, at their respective encampments.

H.E. was accompanied by the Secretary to the Government of India, and by his personal staff, and escorted by a squadron of H.M.'s 2nd dragoon guards, the body guard, and the 1st Punjab irregular cavalry.

At the tent of each chief H.E. received, on arrival and departure, a royal salute. The usual offering was presented and accepted, and after the customary ceremonies H.E. retired.

By order of H.E. the Viceroy and Governor-general.

CHECH. BEATSON,
Sec. to the Govt. of India with the Gov. gen.

Promotion to Rank of Colonel in India.

No. 1,537.—The following paragraphs of a military letter from the Right hon. the Secy. of State for India, No. 279, of Aug. 19, are published for general information:—

Having submitted to the Gen. C. in C. certain questions* as raised by your govt. in view to ascertain the practice in such cases in H.M.'s British army, I have received the following replies:—

"It is allowed that no deduction is made on account of leaves of absence during the five years required to qualify a lieut. col. for the promotion.

"Several similar cases have occurred in H.M.'s British army, and it has been ruled that an officer so circumstanced must serve other two years to complete the period of five years prescribed in the Warrant of October, 1858, and no allowance of time is conceded with reference to the near completion of the three years under the Warrant of October, 1854, when the new Warrant came into operation."

The practice in promoting officers to the rank of colonel in H.M.'s Indian forces must be regulated accordingly.

Passing in Native Languages.

Camp Oonao, Oct. 31.—No. 9.—In consideration of the difficulty of relieving at once all the officers holding staff and detached appointments who may fail to pass in the native languages on the 19th of November next, under the operation of G.G.O., No. 734, dated May 20, 1859, H.E. the Gov. gen., in order to prevent inconvenience to the public service, is pleased to determine that such unpassed officers shall, after the 19th proximo, retain their respective appointments as "officiating," and shall receive the usual salaries, but only until it is found practicable to relieve them. In no other respect is the G.O., No. 734, affected by this order.

H.E. is further pleased to direct that, in addition to the usual half-yearly examination to be held in January and July next, committees of examination shall be also held on the 10th of April next, at the usual stations, to facilitate the passing of officers qualifying themselves for staff employ.

Losses by Messes.

Oct. 29.—With the sanction of Govt., the C. in C. directs the assembly of committees at stations of the army where claims may be forthcoming to inquire into the particulars of all losses incurred by messes during the period of the mutinies.

2. The proceedings of the committees must in every case be accompanied by an abstract statement showing clearly the amount of losses sustained under each head; and the committees are desired to report separately on the amount claimable by merchants, and on the amount of loss of mess property.

3. A similar report is to be furnished by these committees in regard to the losses sustained, under the same circumstances, by bands and other regimental institutions, but these are to be kept separate from the reports called for in regard to the loss of mess property.

4. The C. in C. further directs that none but officers of experience are to be appointed to sit on these committees.

5. The proceedings are to be carefully drawn up and forwarded, in duplicate, to the offic. asst. adj. gen. of the army at Simla.

Suits against Natives.

Political Dept., Oct. 21.—No. 1,517.—Nawab Ludia Begum, Pearee Begum, Mahomed Khan, Kazee and Mirza Jan, Monshes, re-idents of Banda, having been associated with Ali Bahadoor, late Nawab, in his rebellion against the authority of the British Government; it is hereby declared, in continuation of Notification in this department, No. 907, dated 15th July last, that the exemption of the said Nawab Ludia Begum, Pearee Begum, Mahomed Khan, and Mirza Jan, from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is held to have ceased and determined on the 27th of March, 1859; and it is ordered accordingly, that the Civil Courts shall have power to hear and decide all suits against the said Nawab Ludia Begum, Pearee Begum, Mahomed Khan, and Mirza Jan, in which the cause of action may have arisen, at any time, subsequent to, but not before, the said 27th of March, 1859.

By order of the Lieut. gov. N.W.P.

* Letter from —, dated May 3, 1859, No. 64, paras. 1 to 10, relative to the promotion of officers to the rank of colonel under the operation of the Royal Warrants, dated Oct. 7, 1854, and Oct. 14, 1858.

† Question.—1st. Whether the period occupied by a lieut. col. in joining his regiment or appointment after his return from leave beyond sea should be reckoned in the qualifying period.

† 2nd Lieut. col. Leith, of the Bombay army, completed three years in that rank on Nov. 8, 1858. He has been omitted from the promotions recently made in India, because the Warrant of October, 1854, ceased to be in force after Oct. 14, 1858, the date of the new Warrant.

Durbars.

Foreign Dept., Camp Cawnpore, Nov. 1.—H.E. the hon. the Viceroy and Gov. gen. of India directs that, in future at all durbars held for the reception of native chiefs and gentlemen, the following order of precedence shall be observed:—

On the right hand of the Viceroy will be seated either the native chief for whose reception the durbar is held, or the secretary to the Govt. of India, in the foreign department, according to the orders for the occasion. Next will follow the other native chiefs and others, according to their rank.

On the left hand of the Viceroy H.E. the C. in C.; the chief local civil authority; the other secretaries to the Govt. of India according to their rank; the chief of the staff; the chief local military authority; other local civil authorities not holding a lower office than that of commissioner of a division; heads of departments of the army staff; and all other civil and military officers, according to their relative rank.

The personal staff of the Viceroy and Gov. gen., of the C. in C., and of all other civil and military officers, will be seated behind the Viceroy.

By order of H.E. the right hon. the Viceroy and Gov. gen. of India.

Beatson's Horse.

Head Qrs., Camp Cawnpore, Nov. 4.—With the concurrence of the rt. hon. the Gov. gen., the C. in C. is pleased to alter the present organisation of "Beatson's Horse," and to direct that the two regiments composing it shall be placed on a precisely similar footing to other corps of irregular cavalry, with effect from the date of departure of Col. W. F. Beatson on leave to Europe.

The appointment of brigade major will therefore cease from the date on which this order may be promulgated at the head quarters of the force; and the officer holding it will rejoin his regiment.

Musketry Instruction.

As the musketry instruction of a great many of the regiments armed with Enfield rifles is believed to be still incomplete, the C. in C. is pleased to direct that no division or brigade field days shall take place till after the 15th January next, in order that full time may be allowed to officers commanding British regiments to prosecute the musketry and other elementary regimental instruction.

Head Qrs., Camp Choubeypore, Nov. 5.—The practice is to be carried on independently by the batteries of the two services, under the superintendence of their own commanding officers.

Furloughs to Non-Commissioned Officers.

With the approval of H.E. the Gov. general, the C. in C. is pleased to intimate, in continuation of G. O. of Sept. 9 last, that the grant of furlough to non-commissioned officers is to be restricted to five per cent. of the establishments of corps and departments.

Applications from non-commissioned officers of the Bengal Artillery are to be made through the commandant of the regiment; but those of men on the unattached list must be submitted through the heads of the departments in which they are employed.

In forwarding applications for furlough, commanding officers and heads of departments will invariably state the number of non-commissioned officers already absent on that account, and whether, in the event of the applicant's leave being granted, the limit above prescribed will thereby be exceeded.

Abolition of Brigade Commands.

Fort St. George, Nov. 25.

No. 455.—The Governor in Council directs that the brigade commands at the stations named in the margin,* be abolished from the 31st December next, and that, from the same date, the arrangements as regards staff at stations indicated in the succeeding paragraphs shall have effect. The command on the Nilgiris will also be abolished as soon as arrangements can be made for the performance of the duties now devolving on the officer commanding there.

2. A brigade major, who will perform his duties under the general officer commanding the division when residing at the place, or otherwise under the senior officer in command, will be allowed for each of the following stations:—

Trichinopoly.

Jaulna.

Bellari.

Rangoon.

3. The fort adjutants at Trichinopoly and Bellari will be discontinued, consequent on the appointment of brigade majors at those stations.

4. The fort adjutants of Vellore and Masulipatam will be discontinued, station staff officers being appointed instead.

5. The fort adjutant of Cannanore and the station staff officer at Jaulna will be abolished, their duties being transferred to the brigade major of Malabar and Canara and Jaulna respectively.

Carriage for Troops.

Fort St. George, Nov. 15.

The following extract from the proceedings of Government in the financial (railway) department, dated Nov. 8, 1859, No. 616, and the extract from the proceedings of the Board of Revenue, to which the order of Government applies, are published for general information and guidance.

Read the following proceedings of the Board of Revenue, dated Oct. 26, 1859, No. 4,340:—

4. So long as the present system of furnishing carriage for troops is maintained, cause must arise for such complaints. The special exemption of particular persons from the general liability, would but render the pressure more severe on those not so privileged, and open a door for much petty fraud and extortion, for as laden carts are not pressed in any case, if those employed by the railway or iron companies are to be protected by any kind of pass, whether full or empty, the owners will soon discover a means of turning to profitable account the loan of their passes when their carts are laden.

5. A requisition is served on the magistrate for carriage for troops, and he is obliged to meet it. The only means at his disposal—impressment for the service—is odious to the cart owners.

6. The sole remedy is for Government to do as others must—go into the open market or employ contractors; and the latter is the only course that would fully meet their requirements, and obviate the objections of excessive expense on the one hand, or those incident to the present system on the other.

Order thereon, Nov. 8, 1859, No. 616.

5. The Government entirely concur with the remarks of the Board of Revenue. So long as magistrates have recourse to impressment to meet requisitions for carriage for troops, the service is necessarily odious to cart owners.

6. When a magistrate receives a requisition for carriage for troops, he should advertise for tenders for supplying it, and should accept the most advantageous. He should also arrange with the commanding officer for the discharge of the bandies at the appointed place; and, when practicable, carriage should be exchanged between regiments marching in opposite directions. The G.O. of Government, No. 166, of May 27, 1856, contains full directions to commanding officers on every point connected with carriage for troops.

7. In short, contract should be substituted for compulsion, and the civil and military authorities should see that the contractors are properly protected. If this is done, it may be hoped that the government service will become profitable and popular, as it is in England.

By order of the Hon. the Governor in Council.

T. PYCROFT, Chief Secretary.

Cadet Rank.—Case of Lieut. Moxon.

Fort St. George, Nov. 11.—No. 433.—The following extract from a military despatch from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India is published.

Despatch dated Sept. 30, 1859, No. 141.

21. The case of Lieut. Moxon, referred to in these papers, is not exactly similar to the cases of the officers named below:—

Lieuts. F. A. Howes, J. G. Lindsay, W. H. Burton, H. R. Faber, Madras engineers.

Letter dated April 11, 1859, No. 65.

Paras. 2 & 3.—Submitting claims of certain engineer officers to alteration of rank.

22. Lieut. Moxon was unable, from severe illness, to attend the public examination held on Dec. 12, 1856, at which, it was stated by the public examiner, there was no doubt he would otherwise have maintained his position in the list of cadets examined.

23. Under these circumstances his standing and date of rank were preserved to him, subject to his passing an examination for the engineers when sufficiently recovered to undergo the ordeal.

24. Lieuts. Howes, Lindsay, Burton, and Faber were reported to be not fully qualified for engineer service at the public examinations at which they were brought forward (Dec. 9, 1854, and June 8, 1855), and were allowed a further period of three months to qualify in branches in which they were found to be deficient. They were subsequently reported fit for engineer service, and were assigned date of rank as engineer cadets from the dates on which they were finally reported qualified.

25. It being subsequently represented that engineer cadets thus sent back and ranked were in consequence superseded in army rank by all the artillery and infantry cadets above whom they stood at the public examinations, it was resolved that cadets thus circumstanced should in future be allowed to rank from the date of the public examination, at which they were conditionally selected for engineer service, but below all the engineer cadets who were found fully qualified at the public examination.

26. The engineer officers in question may be allowed the benefit of this revised rule.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

A CONVINCING ARGUMENT.

THE quaint news-letters from a native correspondent at Cabul, which occasionally appear in the Lahore Chronicle, not unfrequently contain exquisite little traits of Oriental character. In one of the very latest we are told, with a charming simplicity, how the old Ameer prevailed upon a Hindoo to become a follower of the Prophet. On the 28th of August some Kohistanes brought before him a Hindoo—possibly a fugitive sepoy—whom they charged with having relapsed from Mahomedanism. No doubt the poor wretch had pronounced the profession of “the true faith” in the first instance, in order to save his life while in the hands of the fierce fanatical mountaineers, and afterwards recanted when he imagined himself in safety. It does not appear, indeed, that the Ameer took the trouble to investigate the circumstances of the case. He adopted a more simple course, and handed over the Hindoo to the Kazee, whom he ordered to convince the other of the truths of Islamism. We know not if the aged Dost, in his admiration of everything English, has taken to reading Milton and so learnt to “—hold it more humane, more heav'nly, first,

By winning words to conquer willing hearts,
And make persuasion do the work of fear.”

If so, he must have experienced some disappointment, for, however excellent the principle, in the present instance it was not found to answer. Three days afterwards the Hindoo was again brought before the judgment-seat as incurably obstinate. The Ameer accordingly washed his hands of the man's blood, and delivered him to the Kazee, to be dealt with according to the law. So the sentence went forth that “the relapse” should be led out and stoned to death. This was an argument for conversion which proved utterly irresistible. The Hindoo at once repeated the kulma—“There is no God but God, and Mahomed is his Prophet”—and straightway became a Moslem, cursing the Kaffir, and looking forward to perpetual joy in the arms of the dark-eyed Houris of Paradise. His reward, however, was not altogether prospective, for the Ameer graciously bestowed upon him a Khillut, or dress of honour, wherewith to array his “new man.” After all, how much more economical is this system than that pursued by our missionary societies, and we suspect it is at least as efficacious. We therefore commend the idea to the consideration of the next May meetings. What will Exeter Hall give us for the hint?

THE GHURWAL RAJA AND PRE-TENDER.

As some of the correspondents of the Indian papers appear disposed to cavil with the decision of the Supreme Government with reference to the disputed succession to the chieftainship of Ghurwal, it may not be superfluous to lay before our readers a brief statement of the real facts of the case, for which we are indebted to the Delhi Gazette. The territory now known as Ghurwal once formed part of the possessions of a petty Raja, whose seat of government was at Chandpoor. Some 360 years ago a Rajpoot adventurer entered the service of the reigning prince, whom he ultimately dethroned and succeeded. This usurper transmitted his ill-gotten spoils to several generations of descendants, together with an hereditary affinity for treacherous practices; one of his successors having delivered up to Aurungzebe his nephew Soliman, the son of his brother Dara, who had fled to him for refuge. Through this disloyal act the rajaship was enlarged by the grants of Chandni and the Dehra Dhoon, and it was not until the commencement of the present century that Nemesis overtook this turbulent and traitorous family. In the year 1803 Raja Pradzumna was not only driven out of the hills by the Ghoorkhas, but on again appealing to arms was defeated a second time and slain. His family then fled to Futttehghur, where they remained in obscurity until Sir David Ochterlony expelled the Ghoorkhas from Kumaon in 1814. The late ruler, Sudersein Sah, was then restored to the seat of his ancestors in Ghurwal, but the plains were retained by the British as the reward of their prowess. For five and forty years Sudersein Sah governed his little territory with justice tempered by lenity, and during the late rebellion proved himself a faithful and zealous vassal. Upwards of a hundred Europeans received at his hands both sympathy and protection, and when his money was exhausted he placed his jewels at the disposal of the Authorities. On his death Lord Canning at once acceded to Major Ramsay's suggestion, that, in acknowledgment of the distinguished loyalty of the deceased prince, his eldest illegitimate son, whom he had formerly recommended to the favourable consideration of the Supreme Government, should be recognised as his successor. A younger brother—also illegitimate—now comes forward, however, and pretends that his father on his death-bed had designated him to succeed to the gудdee. Such may possibly have been the case, though there is no evidence to prove it, and consequently Lord Canning has no choice but to carry out his original decision, or declare the rajaship an integral portion of the British dominions.

A GOVERNMENT PAPER CURRENCY FOR INDIA.*

A NEW and prosperous era seems dawning upon India. The calm that proverbially succeeds a storm has at last set in, and is fast spreading its blessed influences over the length and breadth of the land. The fierce fire of rebellion has been extinguished; a powerful army,

* This article, from the pen of a gentleman who has long devoted himself to the study of currency questions, fully confirms the opinions we expressed in our issue of the 28th of November.

which had risen in mutiny, has been destroyed; British prowess and British supremacy fully vindicated, and peace once more restored. The electric wire encircles the vast continent; railways and canals are progressing rapidly; steam navigation of the great rivers has increased a thousandfold; all tells of increased production, and a future of unbounded prosperity if India only be allowed fair play. One fatal barrier to the full development of her resources, however, remains, and that is the want of a sound monetary system—one that would supply a sufficient circulation for the requirements of the people, and a currency suitable to the present age. Hitherto we have servilely continued the rude and cumbrous metallic system of the Great Mogul, without an effort being made to improve it, or to adapt it to the extended commerce and altered circumstances of the country under British rule.

A movement in the right direction, however, seems about to be made. The last mail or two has brought us many interesting documents, both official and private, upon this all-important question, the future monetary system of India. Amongst the most interesting of these papers will be found a correspondence between the Supreme Government and that of Madras, on the best mode of establishing a Government Paper Currency in India. One scheme is suggested by Sir C. Trevelyan, simple enough and sound in principle, but wholly insufficient except as a mere experiment. The Governor of Madras proposes to use both the precious metals as money instead of restricting ourselves, as at present, to the one metal, silver; and further, that an issue of Government notes to the amount of three millions sterling should be made for the further expansion of the currency, and to economise the use of coin: these notes to be constituted a legal tender, receivable in payment of revenue, and payable in rupees at the General Treasuries in Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Scinde, Agra, and Lahore.

The Supreme Government, in replying to the proposition of Sir C. Trevelyan, divulges a plan of its own for a like object, and which, it appears, was submitted to the home authorities as far back as April last. This scheme originates with the Financial Secretary, Mr. Lushington, and has the preference of the Governor-general in Council over that of Sir C. Trevelyan. Mr. Lushington proposes to “issue local notes convertible only at a few large treasuries conveniently situated in circles of country from three hundred to four hundred miles in diameter.” These notes are not to be a legal tender nor receivable in payment of revenue, but to be taken solely at the option of the public.

Such are the two schemes for reforming the monetary system of India, now brought before the public by these high official authorities. We reluctantly confess that neither of them evinces such a knowledge of the subject as to inspire much confidence in the result; for neither goes to the root of the matter. Sir C. Trevelyan, in his minute of the 11th July, asserts that the substitution of a “gold standard for a silver one” would remedy the existing evils, but he does not explain how, and it would puzzle him to do so; and while his scheme for introducing a Government note currency, making the notes a legal tender, and receivable

RAILWAY FROM UMRITSUR TO DELHI.—The Delhi Gazette says orders have been issued for a survey of the line of railway from Umrtsur to Delhi via Jullundur, Loodiana, and Umballa, and for the examination of the bed of the Beas and Sutlej where the line may cross. We are glad that the route via Jullundur instead of that via Ferozepore has been recommended, and that it is proposed to make over the Grand Trunk road, as far as completed, for the "way," reserving thirty feet for cart traffic. The Punjab Government will thus be saved the expense of completing the road between the Beas and Sutlej, the company will be able to use the road for the carriage of materials, and branch lines are rendered unnecessary, as the route follows the course of trade.

"FEEDING" ROADS.—According to the Hindoo Patriot, the Government of Bengal has resolved to apply the Ferry Funds and a portion of the canal and bridge tolls to the formation of new roads connecting the more important market towns with the railway stations. The plan is a good one, and the "station" roads can be kept up by a municipal rate as those of Calcutta are. It is still a fact that the only good roads in Bengal, with the one exception of the Grand Trunk-road, are those made by indigo planters. Roads from Pandooah to Culnah and from the new stations of the railway to Berhampore are urgently needed.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—

CONSTANT COMPANIONS.—In every climate travellers may repose implicit confidence in the curative powers of these two remedies. They are procurable in every country: armed with them he faces danger with fortitude and repels the attacks of disease with certainty. Holloway's Ointment used in accordance with the printed directions, will cure all wounds, sores, swellings, and external disorders. For fevers, diarrhoea, bowel complaints of all kinds, and bilious headaches, no medicine proves so constantly efficient as Holloway's purifying Pills, which relieve at once, and soon cure. The unfailing success of this treatment has been incontestably proved by the numbers it has saved, after the most approved medicines, most skillfully prescribed, had long been taken in vain.

ALLEN'S MAPS OF INDIA & CHINA.

MAP of INDIA; showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorate, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East India Company. In six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways and telegraphs are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP of INDIA; compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Honourable East India Company, with the railways and telegraphs. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

THE INDUS and its PROVINCES: their Political and Commercial Importance considered in connection with Improved Means of Communication. Illustrated by Statistical Tables and Maps.

By W. P. ANDREW, F.R.G.S., Chairman of the Scinde and Punjab Railways, and Indus Steam Flotilla; Author of "Indian Railways as connected with the Power and Stability of the British Empire in the East," &c., &c., &c.

"The Indus and its Provinces" is really as interesting to the general reader as it is essential to the merchant, the trader, the politician, and the historian."—Morning Chronicle, May 27, 1858.

"Not contented to repose on his laurels as the early advocate for the construction of Railways in India, Mr. Andrew has steadily persevered in developing his original idea, and now, after twelve years of incessant application, we find him concentrating his energies on the improvement of land and river communication in Scinde and the Punjab, though with ulterior views, extending far beyond the immediate benefit of those Provinces."—Allen's Indian Mail, June 12, 1858.

Nothing appears to have been omitted; and the drawings manifest, by their accuracy of detail, the fidelity with which each separate subject has been rendered. There are illustrations of everything connected with a domestic household, servants, furniture, washing establishments, tents, camp equipage, carriage &c.; with humorous scenes on the road, and the various styles adopted for locomotion, whether in vehicles drawn by horses or natives, travelling by palanquins, or in doories, or by the mail-cart, with illustrations exhibiting the peculiarities of the postal arrangements in the East, scenes in travellers' bungalows, in the bazaar, with the economy of the stable, the characteristics of the different breeds of horses as offered for sale by Cabul, Hindostanee, and Arab merchants; nor are the sports of the field omitted—scenes on the turf, tiger-shooting, pig-sticking, and the like—while agriculture has not been forgotten. The Proprietors beg most respectfully to call the attention of the Trade, Noblemen, Clergy, and the Public to their extensive stock of CHOICE WINES of rare vintages.

B. and Co. are not disposed to comment upon the purity of their Wines, which is daily most laudably acknowledged by the public and eminent medical men of all countries, as the increasing patronage of the highest families in the land is a sufficient guarantee.

They beg to call attention in particular to their Pure Tonic Wines as being so valuable to invalids and persons of weak stomachs.

A sample case, containing full-sized sample cases, will be forwarded to any address on receipt of 6s. 6d., or a dozen for 24s.

It is a well-known fact that impure and adulterated Wines are the greatest foes to health, producing acidity in the stomach, and debilitating the digestive organs, while pure Wines will accelerate the digestive powers, invigorating, strengthening, and bracing the nervous system.

Their Tonic Wine is admitted to be most essential to invalids, both old and young, and should never be absent from the homes of the weak and sickly. Its properties are duly acknowledged by the leading men of the Faculty both at home and abroad.
